

Published as the Act directs by Silve for Doig Royal Exchange F. din. 1793.

Published as the Act directs by Silve for Doig Royal Exchange F. din. 1793.

ADVENTURES

OF

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

IN WHICH ARE INCLUDED,

MEMOIRS

OF-A

LADY OF QUALITY.

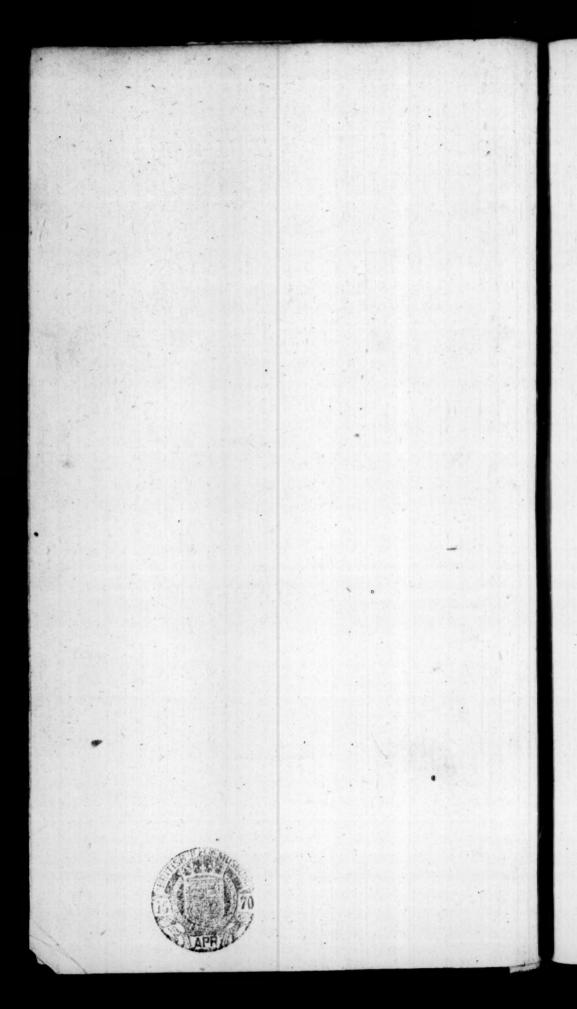

IN FOUR VOLUMES.

VOL. IV.

Respicere exemplar vita morumque jubebo, Doctum imitatorem, & veras binc ducere voces. HOR.

PRINTED FOR SILVESTER DOIG,

M.DCC.XCIII.

THE

CONTENTS

OFTHE

FOURTH VOLUME:

CHAP. LXXXVI.

Peregrine receives a letter from Hatchway, in confequence of which he repairs to the garrison, and perform the last offices to his aunt. He is visited by Mr Gauntlet, who invites him to his marriage. page I

CHAP. LXXXVII.

Peregrine sets out for the garrison, and meets with a nymph on the road, whom he takes into keeping and metamorphoses into a fine lady.

p. 20

CHAP.

CHAP. LXXXVIII.

He is visited by Pallet; contracts an intimacy with a New Market nobleman; and is by the knowing-ones taken in.

CHAP. LXXXIX.

He is taken into the protection of a great man; fets up for member of parliament; is disappointed in his expectation, and finds himself egregiously outwitted. p. 38.

CHAP. XC.

Peregrine commences minister's dependent: meets by accident with Mrs Gauntlet; and descends gradually in the condition of life.

P. 52.

CHAP. XCI.

Cadwallader alls the part of a comforter to his friend; and in his turn is confoled by Peregrine, who begins to find himself a most egregious dupe.

p. 64

CHAP- XCII.

He is indulged with a second audience by the minister, of whose sincerity he is convinced. His pride and ambition revive, and again are mortified.

p. 73

CHAP.

CHAP. XCIII.

Peregrine commits himself to the public, and is admitted member of a college of authors. page 79

CHAP. XCIV.

Further proceedings of the college.

p. 90

CHAP. XCV.

The young gentleman is introduced to a virtuoso of the first order, and commences Yelper. p. 103

CHAP. XCVI.

Peregrine finding himself neglected by Sir Steedy Steerwell, expostulates with him in a letter; in consequence of which, he is forbid his house, loses his pension, and incurs the charge of lunacy.

p. 112

C H A P. XCVII.

He writes against the minister, by whose instigation he is arrested, and moves himself by Habeas Corpus into the Fleet.

p. 127

CHAP. XCVIII.

Pickle feems tolerably well reconciled to his cage: and is by the clergyman entertained with the memoirs of a noted personage whom he sees by accident in the Fleet.

P. 148

CHAP.

CHAP. XCIX.

He is surprised with the appearance of Hatchway and Pipes, who take up their habitation in his neighbour-hood, contrary to his inclination and express defire.

page. 213

CHAPC.

These associates commit an assault upon Crabtree, for which they are banished from the Fleet. Peregrine begins to feel the effects of confinement. p. 223

CHAP CI.

He receives an unempetted visit; and the clouds of missortune begin to separate. p. 231

CHAP. CII.

Peregrine reconciles himself to the lieutenant; and renews his connection with society. Divers plans are projected in his behalf; and he has occasion to exhibit a remarkable proof of self denial.

p. 240

CHAP CIII.

He is engaged in a very extraordinary correspondence, which is interrupted by a very unexpected event. p. 245.

CHAP

He

He

lif

CHAP. CIV.

Peregrine holds a consultation with his friends, in consequence of which, he hids adieu to the Fleet. He arrives at his father's house, and afferts his right of inheritance.

page 256

CHAP. CV.

He performs the last offices to his father, and returns to London upon a very interesting design. p. 263

CHAP. the Last.

He enjoys an interview with Emilia, and makes himfelf ample amends for all the mortifications of his life.

p. 267

ADVENTURES

OF

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

CHAP. LXXXVI

Peregrine receives a letter from Hatchway, in confequence of which he repairs to the garrison, and performs the last offices to his aunt. He is visited by Mr Gauntlet, who invites him to his marriage.

IN this circle of amusements, our hero's time was parcelled out, and few young gentlemen of the age enjoyed life with greater relish, notwithstanding those intervening checks of reason which served only to whet his appetite for a repetition of the pleasures he so prudently condemned; when he received the sollowing letter, by which he was determined to visit his estate in the country

Vol. IV.

COUSIN PICKLE,

T HOPE you are in a better trim than your aunt. who hath been fast moored to her bed these seven weeks, by feveral feet of under-water logging in her hold and hollop, whereby I doubt her planks are rotted, fo as she cannot chuse but fall to cieces in a short time. I have done all in my power to keep her tight and eafy, and free from fudden fqualls that might overstrain her. And here have been the doctors, who have skuttled her lower deck, and let out fix gallons of water. For my own part, I wonder how the devil it came there; for you know as how it was a liquor she never took in. But as for these fellows, the doctors, they are like unskilful carpenters, that in mending one leak make a couple; and fo the fills again apace. But the worst fign of all is this here, she won't let a drop of Nantz go betwixt the combings of her teeth, and has quite loft the rudder of her understanding, whereby she yaws woundily in her speech, palayering about some foreign part called the New Geerusalem, and withing herself in a fafe birth in the river Geordun. The parson, I must fay, firives to keep her fleady concerning the navigation of her foul, and talks very fenfibly of charity and the poor, whereof the hath left a legacy of two hundred pounds in her will. And here has been Mr Gamaliel and your brother my lord, demanding entrance at the gate, in order to fee her; but I would not fuffer them to come aboard, and pointed my patereroes, which made them sheer off. Your fifter, Mrs Clover, keeps close watch upon her kinfwoman, without ever turning in, and a kind-hearted young woman it is. I shall be glad to fee you at the garrison, if the wind of your inclination fits that way; and mayhap it may be a comfort to your aunt, to behold you along fide of her when her her anchor is apeak. So no more at present, but

Your friend
And humble fervant to command,
JOHN HATCHWAY.

Next morning, after the receipt of this epiftle, Peregrine, in order to manifest his regard to his aunt, as well as his friendship for honest Jack, set out on horseback for their habitation, attended by Pipes, who longed to see his old mess-mate; but before he reached the garrison, Mrs Hatchway had given up the ghost, in the threescore and fifth year of her age. The widower feemed to bear his loss with refignation, and behaved very decently upon the occasion, though he did not ungergo those dangerous transports of forrow which fome tender-hearted husbands have felt at the departure of their wives. The Lieutenant was naturally a philofopher, and fo well disposed to acquiesce in the difpensations of providence, that in this, as well as in every other emergency of his life, he firmly believed that every thing which happened was for the best.

Peregrine's task, therefore, was not so great in comforting him as in consoling his own sister, who, with great poignancy and sincerity of grief, lamented the death of the only relation with whom she had maintained any intimacy of correspondence; for her mother was as implacable as ever in her enmity against her and Peregrine, and rather more determined in her rancour; that which was originally a sudden transport of indignation, being, by this time, settled into a confirmed inveteracy of hate. As for Gam, who was now dignified by the country people with the appellation of the Young Squire, he still acted in the capacity of sminister to the caprice and vengeance of his mother, taking all opportunities of disturbing Julia's peace, slandering her reputation, and committing outrages against the tenants and domestics of her husband, who was a man of a quiet and timorous disposition.

But the chief amusement of young Pickle, in his later years, was the chace, in which he acquired some renown by his intrepidity and remarkable figure, which improved every day in deformity, infomuch, as to fuggest a ludicrous scheme of revenge to a gentleman in the neighbourhood. Having been affronted by the infolence of Crookback, he clothed a large baboon that was in his possession, in a dress that resembled the hunting eq ipage of Gam; and ordering the animal to be fet affride, and tied upon the back of his keenelt hunter, turned them out one day after the hounds. horse in a little time outstripping all the rest in the field, the rider was milleken for Gan by the whole company, who fainted him as he paffed with a hollow, observing that the squire had his usual good luck, in being Letter mounted than his neighbours. Pickle afterwards appearing in his own person, created great aftonishmene in the spectators, one of whom asked if he had fplit himself in twain, and pointed out his representative, who was by this time almost up with the hounds; upon which the identical Gam went in pursuit of the impostor. When he overtook him, he was so much enraged at the courterfeit, that he attacked the baboon whip in hand, and, in all probability, would have facrificed him to his refentment, had not he been prevented by the other fox-hunters. They interposed, in order to make up the difference betwixt two brothers of the fport, and were equally furprited and diverted, when they diffinguished the quality of Crookback's antagonist, which they rescued from his rage, and reconveyed to its master.

Peregrine, at the request of his friend Jack, took charge of his aunt's funeral, to which his parents were invited, though they did not think proper to appear, or pay the least regard to his solicitations, when he defired permission to wait upon them in person. Nevertheless, old Gamaliel, at the infligation of his wife, afterwards obtained an order from Doctors Commons, obliging Hatch. way to produce the will of his wife, on the supposition that she had bequeathed to him some part of the money, which (he knew) was at her own disposal. But from this step he reaped no other satisfaction than that of finding himself altogether neglected by the testatrix, who had left all her effects to her husband, except one thousand pounds, with her jewels, to Julia's daughter, the benefaction mentioned in the Lieutenant's letter, and some inconsiderable legacies to her favourite domestics.

A few days after the interment of this good lady, our hero was agreeably furprifed with a vifit from his friend Godfrey, who had come to England in confequence of that promotion which he owed to his interest, though the foldier himself placed it to the credit of a certain courtier who had formerly promifed to befriend him, and now finding his advancement unowned, very modeftly arrogated the merit of it to himself. He communicated his good fortune to Pickle, who complimented him upon it as an event of which he had no precogtition, and at the same time told him, that, in consequence of his preferment, his coufin at Windfor had confented to his being immediately united in the bands of wedlock with his lovely Sophy; that the wedding-day was already fixed; and that nothing would be wanting to his happiness, if Peregrine would honour the nuptials with his presence.

Our hero accepted the invitation with great eager-A 3 ness

ness, when he learned that Emilia would be there in quality of bride's maid; and now repeated what he had formerly written to his friend, namely, that he was not only willing, but extremely impatient to atone for his mad behaviour to that young lady, by laying himfelf and his whole fortune at her feet. Godfrey thanked him for his honourable intention, and promised to use his influence, and that of Sophy, in his behalf; though he feemed dubious of their fuccess, on account of his fifter's delicacy, who could not pardon the least shadow of disrespect. He owned, indeed, he was not certain that she would appear in the same company with Pickle; but as the had made no 'flipulations on that score, he would interpret her filence in the most favourable manner, and keep her in ignorance of his defign, until the should find it too late to retract with any de-The hope of feeing and converfing with Emilia, and perhaps of being reconciled to her, after having fuffered fo much and fo long from her displeasure, raifed a tumult of ideas in his breast, and produced a strange inquietude of joy and perturbation. Gauntlet having flaid with him a few days, and fignified the time appointed for his spoulals, took his leave, in order to prepare for the occasion; while Peregrine, with his friend Hatchway, made a tour among his acquaintance in the country, with a view of founding their inclinations touching a project which he had lately conceived, of offering himself as a candidate for a certain borough in the neighbourhood, at the ensuing election for members of parliament.

This scheme, which was suggested to him by one of his quality patrons, would have succeeded according to his wish, had the election taken place immediately; but before that happened, his interest was overbalenced by some small accidents, that will be recorded in the sequel. In the mean time, he repaired to Windsor on the eve of his friend's marriage, and understood from Godfrey, that it was with the utmost disticulty he and Sophy could prevail upon his fister to be present at the wedding, when she was informed that her lover was invited: and that her consent had not been obtained until they had promised, on the part of Peregrine, that he should not renew the old topic, nor even speak to her in the style of a former acquaintance.

Our young gentleman was nettled at this preliminary, to which, however, he faid he would adhere; and fo well did he think himself fortified with pride and refentment, that he resolved to behave towards her with fuch indifference, as would, he hoped, mortify her vanity, and thereby punish her for the implacability of her disposition. Armed with these sentiments, he was next day introduced by Godfrey to the bride, who received him with her usual sweetness of temper and affability; and Emilia being prefent, he faluted her with a distant bow, which she acknowledged with a cold curt'fy, and an afpect of ice. Though this deportment confirmed her displeasure, her beauty undermined his refolution; he thought her charms were infinitely improved fince their last parting, and a thousand fond images recurring to his imagination, he felt his whole foul diffolving into tenderneis and love.

In order to banish those dangerous ideas he endeavoured to enter into a gay conversation with Sophy, on the subject of the approaching ceremony; but his tongue performed its office awkwardly, his eyes were attracted towards Emilia, as if they had been subject to the power of facination; in spite of all his efforts, a deep sigh escaped from his bosom, and his whole appearance indicated anxiety and confusion.

The bridegroom, perceiving his condition, abridged

the vifit, and having conducted his companion to his own lodgings, expressed his concern at having been the innocent occasion of his uneafiness, by exposing him to the fight of Emilia, which he perceived had given him pain. Peregrine, who had by this time recollected the dictates of his pride, affured him, that he was very much mistaken in the cause of his disorder, which was no other than a sudden qualm, to which he had been for fome time subject; and to shew him how philosophically he could bear the disdain of Emilia, which, with all deference to her conduct, he could not help thinking a little too fevere, he defired, as the bridegroom had made preparation for a private ball in the evening, that he would provide him with an agreeable partner; in which case he would exhibit undoubted proofs of the tranquillity of his heart. "I was in hopes (answered Godfrey) of being able, with the affiftance of Sophy, to make up matters between you and my fifter, and for that reason kept her unengaged to any other gentleman for the night; but fince the was to peevifully obstinate, I shall take care to accommodate you with a very handfome young lady, whose partner will not be forry to exchange her for Emilia."

The thoughts of having an opportunity to coquet with another woman, under the eye of this implacable mistress, supported his spirits during the ceremony which put Gauntlet in possession of his heart's desire; and, by means of this cordial, he found himself so undisturbed at dinner, though he sat opposite to his fair enemy, that he was able to pass some occasional jokes upon the new-married couple, with some appearance of mirth and good-humour. Nor did Emily any otherwise seem affected by his presence, then by excepting him from the participation of those genial regards which she distributed to the rest of the company. This easiness of behaviour on her fide, reinforced his resolution, by giving him pretence to call her sensibility in question; for he could not conceive how any woman of acute seeling could fit unmoved in presence of a man with whom she had such recent and intimate connection: not considering, that she had much more reason to condemn his affectation of unconcern, and that her external deportment might, like his own, be an effort of pride and resentment.

This contest, in point of dissimulation, continued till night, when the company was paired for dancing, and Peregrine began the ball by walking a minuet with the bride; then he took out the young lady to whom he was recommended by Gauntlet, being very well pleafed to fee that her person was such as might have inspired even Emily herself with jealousy, though, at the same time, he perceived his mistress coupled with a gay young officer, whom (with all due deference to his own qualifications) he confidered as no despicable rival. ver, he himself first began hostilities, by becoming all of a fudden particular with his partner, whom he forth. with affailed with flattering compliments, that foon introduced the subject of love, upon which he expatiated with great art and elocution, using not only the faculty of speech, but also the language of the eyes, in which he was a perfect connoisseur.

This behaviour foon manifested itself to the whole assembly, the greatest part of whom believed that he was in good earnest captivated by the charms of his partner, while Emilia, penetrating into his design, turned his own artillery upon himself, by seeming to listen with pleasure to the addresses of his rival, who was no novice in the art of making love; she even affected uncommon vivacity, and giggled aloud at every whisper which he conveyed into her ear, insomuch that she, in her turn, afforded speculation to the company, who imagined the young foldier had made a conquest of the bridegroom's fifter.

Pickle himself began to cherish the same opinion, which gradually invaded his good humour, and, at length, filled his bosom with rage. He strove to suppress his indignation, and called every consideration of vanity and revenge to his aid: he endeavoured to wean his eyes from the fatal object that disturbed him, but they would not obey his direction and command: he wished himself deprived of all sensation, when he heard her laugh, and faw her smile upon the officer; and, in the course of country-dancing, when he was obliged to join hands with her, the touch thrilled through all his nerves, and kindled a flame within him which he could not contain. In a word, his endeavours to conceal the fituation of his thoughts were fo violent, that his conflitution could not endure the shock: the sweat ran down his forehead in a ftream, the colour vanished from his cheeks, his knees began to totter, and his eyefight to fail, so that he must have fallen at his full length upon the floor, had not he retired very abruptly into another room, where he threw himfelf upon a couch and fainted.

In this condition he was found by his friend, who feeing him withdraw with fuch symptoms of disorder, followed him thither; and when he recovered the use of his faculties, preffed him to make use of a bed in that house, rather than expose himself in the night air, by going home to his own lodgings: but not being able to prevail upon him to accept the offer, he wrapped him up in a cloak, and conducted him to the inn where he lodged, helped him to undress and go to bed, where he was immediately seized with a violent fit of the ague. Godfrey behaved with great tenderness, and would have actually actually bore him company all night, notwithstanding the circumstances of his own fituation, had not his friend infisted upon his returning to the company, and making his apology to his partner for his fudden departure.

This was a step absolutely necessary towards maintaining the quiet of the assembly, which he found in great consternation, occasioned by his absence; for some of the ladies seeing the bridegroom follow the stranger in his retreat, the meaning of which they did not comprehend, began to be assaid of a quarrel. Emilia, upon pretence of that supposition, was so much alarmed, that she could not stand, and was sain to have recourse to a smelling bottle.

The bride, who understood the whole mystery, was the only person that acted with deliberation and composure. She imputed Emilia's disorder to the right caufe, which was no other than concern for the condition of her lover, and affured the ladies there was nothing extraordinary in Mr Pickle's going off, he being fubject to fainting fits, by which he was often overtaken without any previous notice. The arrival of Gauntlet confirmed the truth of this declaration: he made an apology to the company, in the name of his friend. who, he told them, was fuddenly taken ill; and they returned to their diversion of dancing, with this variation, Emilia was to difordered and fatigued, that the begged to be excused from continuing the exercise; and Peregrine's partner being difengaged, was paired with the young officer for whom the was originally defigned.

Meanwhile, the bride withdrew into another apartment with her fifter, and expollulated with her upon her cruelty to Mr rickle, affuring her, from Godfrey's information, that he had undergone a fevere fit on her account,

count, which, in all likelihood, would have a dangerous effect upon his conflictation. Though Emily was inflexible in her answers to the kind remonstrances of the gentle Sophy, her heart was melting with the impressions of pity and love; and finding herself unable to perform the duty of her function, in putting the bride to bed, she retired to her own chamber, and in secret sympathised with the distemper of her lover.

In the morning, as early as decency would permit him to leave the arms of his dear wife, Captain Gauntlet made a vifit to Peregrine, who had paffed a very tedious and uneasy night, having been subject to short intervals of delirium, during which Pipes had found it very difficult to keep him fast belayed. He owned indeed to Godfrey, that his imagination had been haunted by the ideas of Emilia and her officer, which tormented him to an unspeakable degree of auguith and distraction; and that he would rather suffer death than a repetition of such excruciating reflections. He was, however, comforted by his friend, who affured him, that his fifter's inclinations would, in time, prevail over all the endeavours of refentment and pride, illustrating this affeveration by an account of the manner in which the was affected by the knowledge of his diforder, and advising him to implore the mediation of Sophy, in a letter which she should communicate to Emilia.

This was an opportunity which our hero thought too favourable to be neglected; calling for paper, he fat up in his bed, and, in the first transports of his emotion, wrote the following petition to Godfrey's amiable wife:

DEAR MADAM,

THE affliction of a contrite heart can never appeal to your benevolence in vain, and therefore I prefume to approach you, in this feafon of delight, with the language of forrow, requesting that you will espouse the cause of an unhappy lover, who mourns with unutterable anguish over his ruined hope, and intercede for my pardon with that divine creature, whom, in the intemperance and excess of passion, I have so mortally offended. Good Heaven! is my guilt inexpiable? Am I excluded from all hope of remission? Am I devoted to mifery and despair? I have offered all the atonement which the most perfect and fincere penitence could fuggest, and she rejects my humility and repentance. If her refentment would purfue me to the grave, let her fignify her pleasure; and may I be branded with the name of villain, and remembered with infamy and deteffation to all posterity, if I hesitate one moment in facrificing a life which is odious to Emilia. Ah! Madam, while I thus pour forth the effusions of my grief and distraction, I look around the apartment in which I lie, and every well known object that falutes my view, recals to my remembrance that fond, that happy day, on which the fair, the good, the tender-hearted Sophy became my advocate, though I was a stranger to her acquaintance, and effected a transporting reconciliation between me and that fame enchanting beauty that is now fo implacably incenfed. If the is not fatisfied with the pangs of remorfe and disappointment, the transports of madness I have undergone, let her prescribe what farther penance she thinks I ought to endure; and when I decline her fentence, let me be the object of her eternal difdain.

I commit myfelf, dear Madam! dear Sophy! dear partner of my friend! to your kind interpolition. I know you will manage my cause, as a concern on which my happiness entirely depends; and I hope every thing from your compassion and beneficence, while I fear e-

VOL. IV.

0

P

.

al

e-

ne

B

very

every thing from her rigour and barbarity. Yes! I call it barbarity, a favageness of delicacy altogether inconsistent with the tenderness of human nature; and may the most abject contempt be my portion if I live under its scourge! But I begin to rave. I conjure you by your own humanity and sweetness of disposition, I conjure you by your love for the man whom Heaven hath decreed your protector, to employ your influence with that angel of wrath, in behalf of

Your obliged and

Obedient servant,

P. PICKLE.

This epiftle was immediately transmitted by Godfrey to his wife, who perused it with marks of the most humane sympathy; and carrying it into her fifter's chamber, " Here is fomething (faid she, presenting the paper) which I must recommend to your serious attention." Emilia, who immediately gueffed the meaning of this address, absolutely refused to look upon it, or even to hear it read, till her brother, entering the apartment, reprimanded her sharply for her obstinacy and pride, accused her of folly and dissimulation, and entered so warmly into the interests of his friend, that she thought him unkind in his remonstrances, and bursting into a flood of tears, reproached him with partiality and want of affection. Godfrey, who entertained the most perfect love and veneration for his fifter, asked pardon for having given offence, and kiffing the drops from her fair eyes, begged she would, for his fake, listen to the declaration of his friend.

Thus folicited, the could not refuse to hear the letter, which, when he had repeated, the lamented her own fate in being the occasion of so much uneasiness, desired her brother to assure Mr Pickle, that she was not a voluntary enemy to his peace; on the contrary, she wished him all happiness, though she hoped he would not blame her for consulting her own, in avoiding any future explanation or connection with a person whose correspondence she found herself under a necessity to renounce.

In vain did the new-married couple exhaust their eloquence in attempting to prove, that the reparation which our hero had offered was adequate to the injury
she had sustained; that in reconciling herself to a penitent lover, who subscribed to her own terms of submission, her honour would be acquitted by the most scrupulous and severe judges of decorum; and that her inslexibility would be justly ascribed to the pride and insensibility of her heart. She turned a deaf ear to all their arguments, exhortations, and intreaties, and threatened to leave the house immediately, if they would not promise to drop that subject of discourse.

Godfrey, very much chagrined at the bad success of his endeavours, returned to his friend, and made as favourable a report of the affair as the nature of his conversation with Emilia would permit: but as he could not avoid mentioning her resolution in the close, Peregrine was obliged to drink again the bitter draught of disappointment, which put his passions into such a state of agitation, as produced a thort ecstasy of despair, in which he acted a thousand extravagancies. This paroxism, however, soon subsided into a settled reserve of gloomy resentment, which he in secret indulged, detaching himself as soon as possible from the company of the soldier, on pretence of retiring to rest.

0

t

t

r

r

e

-

r

s,

15

ot

While he lay ruminating upon the circumstances of his present situation, his friend Pipes, who knew the cause of his anxiety, and firmly believed that Emilia loved his master in her heart, howsoever she might attempt to disguise her sentiments; I say, Thomas was taken with a conceit which he thought would fet every thing to rights, and therefore put it in execution without farther delay. - Laying afide his hat, he ran directly to the house of Sophy's father, and affecting an air of furprise and consternation to which he had never before been subject, thundered at the door with such an alarming knock, as in a moment brought the whole family into the hall. When he was admitted, he began to gape, flare, and pant at the same time, and made no reply when Godfrey asked what was the matter, until Mrs Gauntlet expressed her apprehensions about his mafter. When Pickle's name was mentioned, he seemed to make an effort to speak, and in a bellowing tone pronounced, " Brought himself up, split my topsails!" So faving, he pointed to his own neck, and rose upon his tiptoes, by way of explaining the meaning of his words.

Godfrey, without staying to ask another question, rushed out, and slew towards the inn, with the utmost horror and concern; while Sophy, who did not rightly understand the language of the messenger, addressing herself to him a second time, said, with great earnestness, "I hope no accident has happened to Mr Pickle!" "No accident at all, (replied Tom) he has only hanged himself for love." These words had scarce proceeded from his mouth, when Emilia, who stood listening at the parlour-door, shrieked aloud, and dropped down fenseless upon the sloor; while her sister, who was almost equally shocked at the intelligence, had recourse to the assistance of her maid, by whom she was supported from falling.

Pipes hearing Emily's voice, congratulated himfelf upon the success of his stratagem. He sprung to her assistance, and listing her up into an easy-chair, stood by her until he saw her recover from her swoon, and heard her call upon his master's name, with all the frenzy of despairing love. Then he bent his course back to the inn, overjoyed at the opportunity of telling Peregrine what a confession he had extorted from his mistress, and extremely vain of this proof of his own fagacity.

In the mean time, Godfrey arriving at the house in which he supposed this fatal catastrophe had happened, ran up stairs to Peregrine's chamber, without staying to make any inquiry below; and finding the door locked, burst it open with one stroke of his foot. But what was his amazement, when, upon entrance, our hero starting up from the bed, saluted him with a boisterous exclamation of "Z——ds! who's there?" He was struck dumb with assonishment, which also rivetted him to the place where he stood, scarce crediting the testimony of his own senses, till Peregrine, with an air of discontent which denoted him displeased with his intrusion, dispelled his apprehension by a second address, saying, "I see you consider me as a friend, by your using me without ceremony."

The foldier, thus convinced of the falsehood of the information he had received, began to imagine that Pickle had projected the plan which was executed by his fervant; and looking upon it as a piece of unjustifiable finesse, which might be attended with very melancholy consequences to his fister or wife, he answered in a supercitious tone, that Mr Pickle must blame himself for the interruption of his repose, which was entirely owing to the forry jest he had set on foot.

Pickle, who was the child of passion, and more than half-mad with impatience before this visit, hearing him-felf treated in such a cavalier manner, advanced close up to Godfrey's breast, and assuming a stern, or rather frantic countenance, "Heark ye, Sir, (faid he) you are mistaken if you think I jest; I am in downright earnest, I affure you." Gauntlet, who was not a man to be brow-beaten, feeing himself thus bearded by a person of whose conduct he had, he thought, reason to complain, put on his military look of defiance, and erecting his cheft, replied with an exalted voice, "Mr Pickle, whether you was in ject or earnest, you must give me leave to tell you, that the scheme was childish, unseasonable, and unkind, not to give it any harsher term." "Sdeath, Sir, (cried our adventurer) you trifle with my disquite; if their is any meaning in your infinuation, explain yourfelf, and then' I shall know what answer it will besit me to give." " I came with very different fentiments (refumed the foldier); but fince you urge me to expostulation, and behave with fuch unprovoked loftiness of displeasure, I will, without circumlocution, tax you with having committed an outrage upon the peace of my family, in fending your fellow to alarm us with fuch an abrupt account of your having done violence upon yourself." Peregrine, confounded at this imputation, flood filent, with a most favage aspect of surprise, eager to know the circumstance to which his accuser alluded, and incenfed to find it beyond the fphere of his comprehension.

While these two irritated friends stood fronting each other with mutual indignation in their eyes and attitudes, they were joined by Pipes, who, without taking the least notice of the situation in which he found them, told his master, that he might up with the top-gallant masts of his heart, and out with his rejoicing pendants; for as to mistress Emily, he had clapt her helm a-weather, the vessel wore, and now she was upon the other tack, standing right into the harbour of his good-will.

Peregrine, who was not a connoisseur in the terms of his lackey, commanded him upon pain of his displeafure to be more explicit in his intelligence; and by dint of divers questions, obtained a perfect knowledge of the scheme which he had put in execution for his fervice. This information perplexed him not a little : he would have chaftised his servant upon the spot for his temerity, had he not plainly perceived that the fellow's intention was to promote his ease and satisfaction; and, on the other hand, he knew not how to acquit himfelf of the fuspicion which he saw Godfrey entertain of his being the projector of the plan, without condescending to an explanation, which his present disposition could not brook. After some pause, however, turning to Pipes with a fevere frown, " Rafcal! (faid he) this is the second time I have suffered in the opinion of that lady by your ignorance and prefumption: if ever you intermeddle in my affairs for the future, without express order and direction, by all that's facred, I will put you to death without mercy. Away, and let my horse be faddled this inflant."

Pipes having withdrawn, in order to perform this piece of duty, our young gentleman, addressing himself again to the soldier, and laying his hand upon his breast, said, with a solemnity of regard, "Captain Gauntlet, upon my honour, I am altogether innocent of that shallow device which you impute to my invention; and I don't think you do justice, either to my intellects or honour, in supposing me capable of such insolent absurdity. As for your sister, I have once in my life affronted her in the madness and impetuosity of desire; but I have made such acknowledgments, and offered such atonement, as few women of her sphere would have resused; and, before God, I am determined to endure every torment of disappointment and despair, rather than prostrate mystelf again to the cruelty of her unjustissable pride." So faying, he stalked suddenly down stairs, and took horse immediately, his spirits being supported by resentment, which prompted him to vow within himself, that he would seek consolation for the distain of Emilia, in the possession of the first willing wench he should meet upon the road.

While he set out for the garrison with these sentiments, Gauntlet, in a suspence between anger, shame, and concern, returned to the house of his father-in-law, where he found his sister still violently agitated from the news of Peregrine's death, the mystery of which he forthwith unravelled, recounting at the same time the particulars of the conversation which had happened at the inn, and describing the demeanour of Pickle with some expressions of asperity, which were neither agreeable to Emilia, nor approved of by the gentle Sophy, who tenderly chid him for allowing Peregrine to depart in terms of misunderstandig.

CHAP. LXXXVII.

Peregrine sets out for the garrison, and meets with a nymph on the road, whom he takes into keeping, and metamorphoses into a sine lady.

IN the mean time, our hero jogged along in a profound reverie, which was disturbed by a beggar woman and her daughter, who solicited him for alms as he passed them on the road. The girl was about the age of sixteen, and, notwithstanding the wretched equipage, in which she appeared, exhibited to his view a set of agreeable features, enlivened with the complexion of health and cheerfulness. The resolution I have already mentioned mentioned was still warm in his imagination; and he looked upon this young mendicant as a very proper object for the performance of his vow. He therefore entered into a conference with the mother, and for a small sum of money purchased her property in the wench, who did not require much courtship and intreaty before the consented to accompany him to any place that he should appoint for her habitation.

This contract being fettled to his fatisfaction, he ordered Pipes to fet his acquisition behind him upon the crupper, and alighting at the first public house which they found upon the road, he wrote a letter to Hatchway desiring him to receive this hedge-inamorata, and direct her to be cleaned and clothed in a decent manner, with all expedition, so that she should be touchable upon his arrival, which (on that account) he would defer for the space of one day. This billet, together with the girl, he committed to the charge of Pipes, after having laid strong injunctions upon him to abitain from all attempts upon her chastity, and ordered him to make the best of his way to the garrison, while he himself crossed the country, to a market-town, where he proposed to spend the night.

Tom, thus cautioned, proceeded with his charge, and, being naturally taciturn, opened not his lips until he had performed the best half of his journey. But Thomas, notwithstanding his irony appearance, was in reality composed of sless and blood. His desire being titillated by the contact of a buxom wench, whose right arm embraced his middle as he rode, his thoughts began to mutiny against his master, and he found it almost impossible to withstand the temptation of making love.

Nevertheless, he wrestled with these rebellious suggestions with all the reason that Heaven had enabled him him to exert; and that being totally overcome, his victorious passion suddenly broke out in this address, -"'Sblood! a believe master think I have no more stuff in my body than a dried haddock, to turn me adrift in the dark with fuch a spanker. D'ye think he don't, my dear?" To this question his fellow-traveller replied, "Swanker! Annan!" and the lover refumed his fuit, faying, " Oons! how you tickle my timber! Something shoots from your arm, through my stowage, to the very keel-flone. Han't you got quickfilver in your hand ?" " Quickfilver! (faid the lady) D-n the filver that has croffed my hand this month. D'ye think if I had filver, I shoudn't buy me a smoke?" " Adzooks! ye baggage (cried the lover) you should'nt want a smoke nor a petticoat neither, if you could have a kindness for a true-hearted failor, as found and as strong as a nine-inch cable, that would keep all clear aboveboard, and every thing fnug under the harches." " Curfe your gum (faid the charmer) what's your gay balls and your hatches to me?" Do but let us bring to a little, (answered the wooer, whose appetite was by this time whetted to a most ravenous degree) and I'll teach you to box the compass, my dear. Ah! you ftrapper, what a jolly bitch you are!" "Bitch! (exclaimed this modern Dulcinea, incenfed at the opprobrious term) fuch a bitch as your mother, you dog. D-n ye, I've a good mind to box your jaws instead of your comepifs. I'll let you know as how I am meat to your master, you faucy blackguard. You are worse than a dog, you old flinty-fac'd, flea-bitten fcrub: a dog wears his own coat, but you wear your matter's."

Such a torrent of disgraceful epithets from a person who had no clothes at all, converted the gallant's love into choler, and he threatened to dismount and size her to a tree, when she should have a taste of his cat and nine tails athwart her quarters; but, instead of being intimidated by his menaces, the fet him at defiance, and held forth with fuch a flow of eloquence, as would have entitled her to a confiderable share of reputation, even among the nymphs of Billingfgate; for this young lady, over and above a natural genius for altercation, had her talents cultivated among the venerable fociety of weeders, podders, and hoppers, with whom she had affociated from her tender years. No wonder then that the foon obtained a complete victory over Pipes, who (as the reader may have observed) was very little addicted to the exercise of speech: indeed, he was utterly disconcerted by her volubility of tongue; and being altogether unfurnished with answers to the distinct periods of her discourse, very wisely chose to fave himself the expence of breath and argument, by giving her a full fwing of cable, fo that she might bring herself up; while he rode onwards, in filent composure, without taking any more notice of his fair fellow-traveller, than if the had been his mafter's cloak bag.

In spite of all the dispatch he could make, it was late before he arrived at the garrison, where he delivered the letter and the lady to the Lieutenant, who no fooner understood the intention of his friend, than he ordered all the tubs in the house to be carried into the hall. and filled with water. Tom having provided himfelf with fwabs and brushes, divested the fair stranger of her variegated drapery, which was immediately committed to the flames, and performed upon her foft and fleek person the ceremony of scrubbing, as it is practifed on board of the king's ships of war. Yet the nymph herfelf did not submit to this purification without repining; fhe curs'd the director, who was upon the fpot, with many abusive allusions to his wooden leg; and as for Pipes, the operator, she employed her talons talons so effectually upon his face, that the blood ran over his nose in sundry streams; and next morning, when those rivulets were dry, his countenance resembled the rough bark of a plumb-tree plaistered with gum. Nevertheless, he did his duty with great perseverance, cut off her hair close to the scalp, handled his brushes with dexterity, applied his swabs of different magnitude and texture as the case required; and lastly, rinsed the whole body with a dozen pails of cold water discharged upon her head.

These ablutions being executed, he dried her with towels, accommodated her with a clean shift, and acting the part of a valet-de-chambre, cloathed her from head to foot in clean and decent apparel which had belonged to Mrs Hatchway; by which means her appearance was altered so much for the better, that when Peregrine arrived next day, he could scarce believe his own eyes. He was, for that reason, extremely well pleased with his purchase, and now resolved to indulge a whim, which seized him at the very instant of his arrival.

He had (as I believe the reader will readily allow) made considerable progress in the study of character, from the highest rank to the most humble station of life, and found it diversified in the same manner, through every degree of subordination and precedency: nay, he moreover observed, that the conversation of those who are dignissed with the appellation of polite company, is neither more edifying nor entertaining than that which is met with among the lower classes of mankind; and that the only essential difference, in point of demeanour, is the form of an education which the meanest capacity can acquire without much study or application. Possessed of this notion, he determined to take the young mendicant under his own tutorage and instruction. In consequence of which he hoped he should, in a few weeks, be able to produce her in company, as an accomplished young lady, of uncommon wit and an excellent understanding.

This extravagant plan he forthwith began to execute with great eagerness and industry; and his endeavours fucceeded even beyond his expectation. The obstacle, in furmounting of which he found the greatest difficulty, was an inveterate habit of fwearing, which had been indulged from her infancy, and confirmed by the example of those among whom she had lived. However, the had the rudiments of good fense from nature, which taught her to listen to wholesome advice, and was so docile as to comprehend and retain the lessons which her governor recommended to her attention; infomuch, that he ventured in a few days to present her at table among a fet of country squires, to whom she was introduced as niece to the Lieutenant. In that capacity the fat with becoming eafiness of mien, (for the was as void of the mauvaise bonte as any dutchess in the land) bowed very graciously to the compliments of the gentlemen; and though she said little or nothing, because The was previously cautioned on that score, she more than once gave way to laughter, and her mirth happened to be pretty well timed. In a word, she attracted the applause and admiration of the guests, who, after the was withdrawn, complimented Mr Hatchway upon the beauty, breeding, and good-humour of his kinfwoman.

But what contributed more than any other circumflance to her speedy improvement, was some small infight into the primmer, which she had acquired at a day-school, during the life of her father, who was a day-labourer in the country. Upon this soundation did Peregrine build an elegant superstructure; he culled out choice sentences from Shakespear, Otway, and Pope, and taught her to repeat them with an emphasis and theatrical cadence : he then instructed her in the names and epithets of the most celebrated players, which he directed her to pronounce occasionally, with an air of careless familiarity; and perceiving that her voice was naturally clear, he enriched it with remnants of opera tunes, to be hummed during a pause of conversation, which is generally supplied with the circulation of a pinch of fnuff. By means of this cultivation, she became a wonderful proficient in the polite graces of the age; she, with great facility, comprehended the scheme of whift, though cribbage was her favourite game with which the had amused herself in her vacant hours, from her first entrance into the profession of hopping; and brag foon grew familiar to her practice and conception.

Vol. IV. C and

Thus prepared, she was exposed to the company of her own fex, being first of all visited by the parson's daughter, who could not avoid shewing that civility to Mr Hatchway's niece, after the had made her public appearance at church. Mrs Clover, who had a great share of penetration, could not help entertaining some doubts about this same relation, whose name she had never heard the uncle mention during the whole term of her residence at the garrison: but as the young lady was treated in that character, the would not refuse her acquaintance, and, after having feen her at the caffle, actually invited Miss Hatchway to her house. In short, the made a progress through almost all the families in the neighbourhood; and, by dint of her quotations (which, by the bye, were not always judiciously used) the paffed for a sprightly young lady, of uncommon learning and tafte.

Peregrine having in this manner initiated her in the beau-monde of the country, conducted her to London, where where the was provided with private lodgings and a female attendant; and put her immediately under the tuition of his valet-de-chambre, who had orders to instruct her in dancing and the French language. He attended her to plays and concerts, three or four times a-week; and when our hero thought her fufficiently accustomed to the fight of great company, he squired her in person to a public assembly, and danced with her among all the gay ladies of fashion: not but that there was still an evident air of rusticity and awkwardness in her demeanour, which was interpreted into an agreeable wildness of spirit, superior to the forms of commonbreeding. He afterwards found means to make her acquainted with some diffinguished patterns of her own fex, by whom she was admitted into the most elegant parties, and continued to make good her pretentions to gentility with great circumfpection. But one evening, being at cards with a certain lady whom she detected in the very act of unfair conveyance, the taxed her round i ly with the fraud, and brought upon herfelf fuch a tor rent of farcastic reproof, as overbore all her maxims of caution, and burfting open the floodgates of her own natural repartee, twanged off with the appellation of b- and w-, which she repeated with great vehemence, in an attitude of manual defiance, to the terrorof her antagonist, and the astonishment of all present; nay, to fuch an unguarded pitch was the provoked, that, flarting up, the fnapt her fingers, in testimony of difdain, and, as the quitted the room, applied her hand to that part which was the last of her that disappeared. inviting the company to kifs it, by one of its coarfest denominations.

Peregrine was a little disconcerted at this oversight in her behaviour, which, by the dæ non of intelligence, was in a moment conveyed to all the private companies in town; fo that she was absolutely excluded from all polite communication, and Peregrine, for the prefent, difgraced among the modest part of his female acquaintance, many of whom not only forbade him their houses, on account of the impudent infult he had committed upon their honour as well as understanding, in palming a common trull upon them as a young lady of birth and education, but also aspersed his family, by affirming that she was actually his own cousin german, whom he had precipitately raised from the most abject state of humility and contempt. In revenge for this calumny, our young gentleman explained the whole mystery of her promotion, together with the motives that induced him to bring her into the fashionable world; and repeated, among his companions, the extravagant encomiums which had been bestowed upon her by the most discerning matrons of the age.

Meanwhile, the infanta herself being rebuked by her benefactor for this instance of misbehaviour, promifed faithfully to keep a ftricter guard for the future over her conduct, and applied herfelf with great assiduity to her studies, in which she was affisted by the Swis, who gradually loft the freedom of his heart, while she was profiting by his instruction. In other words, she made a conquest of her preceptor, who, yielding to the instigations of the slesh, chose a proper opportunity to declare his passion, which was powerfully recommended by his personal qualifications; and his intentions being honourable, she listened to his proposals of espousing her in private. In consequence of this agreement, they made an elopement together; and being buckled at the Fleet, consummated their nuptials in private lodgings, by the Seven Dials, from which the husband next morning fent a letter to our hero, begging forgivenels for the clandestine step he had taken, which he solemnly protested protested was not owing to any abatement in his inviolable regard for his mafter, whom he should always honour and effeem to his latest breath, but entirely to the irrefiftible charms of the young lady, to whom he was now fo happy as to be joined in the filken bands of marriage.

intereft 1

Peregrine, though at first offended at his valet's prefumption, was, upon fecond thoughts, reconciled to the event, by which he was delivered from an incumbrance; for by this time he had performed his frolic, and begun to be tired of his acquisition. He reslected on the former fidelity of the Swifs, which had been manifested in a long course of service and attachment : and thinking . it would be cruelly fevere to abandon him to poverty and diffress for one venial trespass, he resolved to pardon what he had done, and enable him in some shape to provide for the family which he had entailed upon himfelf.

With these sentiments he sent a favourable answer to the delinquent, defising to fee him as foon as his paffion would permit him to leave the arms of his spouse, for an hour or two; nd Hadgi, in obedience to this intimation, repaired to the lodgings of his mafter, before whom he appeared with a most penitential aspect. Peregrine, though he could scarce help laughing at his rueful length of face, reprimanded him sharply for his difrespect and ingratitude, in taking that by flealth which he might have had for asking. The culprit asfured him, that next to the vengeance of God, his mafler's displeasure was that which, of all evils, he dreaded to incur; but that love had diffracted his brain in fuch a manner, as to banish every other confideration but that of gratifying his defire; and he owned; that he should not have been able to preserve his fidelity and duty to his own father, had they interfered with the ... C.3

interest of his passion. He then appealed to his master's own heart for the remission of his guilt, alluding to certain circumstances of our hero's conduct, which evinced the desperate essects of love. In short, he made such an apology as extorted a smile from his offended judge, who not only forgave his transgression, but also promised to put him in some fair way of earning a comfortable subsistence.

The Swiss was so much affected with this instance of generosity, that he fell upon his knees, and kissed his hand, praying to Heaven, with great servour, to make him worthy of such goodness and condescension. His scheme, he said, was to open a cosse-house and tavern in some creditable part of the town, in hopes of being savoured with the custom of a numerous acquaintance he had made among upper servants and reputable tradesmen, not doubting that his wife would be an ornament to his bar, and a careful manager of his affairs. Peregrine approved of the plan, towards the execution of which he made him and his wife a present of sive hundred pounds, together with a promise of erecting a weekly club among his friends, for the reputation and advantage of the house.

Hadgi was so transported with his good fortune, that he ran to Pipes, who was in the room, and having hugged him with great cordiality, and made his obedience to his master, hied him home to his bride to communicate his happiness, cutting capers and talking to himself all the way

CHAP. LXXXVIII.

He is visited by Pallet; contracts an intimacy with a New-Market nobleman; and is by the knowing-ones taken in.

THIS affair being fettled, and our adventurer, for the present, free of all female connections, he returned to his former course of fast living among the bucks of the town, and performed innumerable exploits among whores, bullies, rooks, constables, and justices of the peace. In the midst of these occupations he was one morning vifited by his old fellow-traveller Pallet, whose appearance gave him equal furprise and concern. Though the weather was fevere, he was cloathed in the thin fummer-dress which he had wore at Paris, and was now not only thread-bare, but in some parts actually patched; his stockings, by a repetition of that practice known among reconomists by the term of coaxing, hung like pudding bags about his ankles; his shirt, though new wash'd, was of the faffron hue, and in divers places appeared through the crannies of his breeches; he had exchanged his own hair for a smoke-dry'd tie-periwig, which all the flour in his drudging-box had not been able to whiten; his eyes were funk, his jaws lengthened beyond their usual extension; and he seemed twenty years older than he looked when he and our hero parted at Rotterdam.

In spite of all these evidences of decay, he accosted him with a meagre affectation of content and good humour, struggled piteously to appear gay and unconcerned, professed his joy at seeing him in England, excused himself for having delayed so long to come and present his respects; alledging, that since his return, he had been a mere flave to the satisfaction of some persons of quality and taste, who had insisted upon his finishing some pieces with the utmost expedition.

Peregrine received him with that compassion and complaifance which was natural to his disposition; inquired about the health of Mrs Pallet and his family, and asked if his friend the doctor was in town. The painter feemed to have refumed his refentment against that gentleman, of whom he spoke in contemptuous terms. "The doctor (faid he) is fo much overshadowed with presumption and felf-conceit, that his merit has no relief. It does not rife. There is no keeping in the picture, my dear Sir. All the same as if I were to represent the moon under a cloud; there will be nothing but a deep mass of shade, with a little tingy speck of light in the middle, which would only ferve to make, as it were, the darkness visible: You understand me. Had he taken my advice, it might have been better for him: but he's begotted to his own opinion. You must know, Mr Pickle, upon our return to England, I counfelled him to compole a little fmart clever ode upon my Cleopatra. As God shall judge me, I thought it would have been of some service, in helping him out of obscurity; for you know, as Sir Richard observes.

Soon will that die, which adds thy fame to mine: Let me then live, join'd to a work of thine.

By the bye, there is a most picturesque contrast in these lines of thy and me, living and dying, and thine and mine. Ah! a pize upon it! Dick, after all, was the man. Ecod! he rounded it off. But to return to this unhappy young man, would you believe it, he tosed up his nose at my friendly proposal, and gabbled something in Greek, which is not worth repeating. The case was this, my dear Sir, he was out of humour at the neglect of the world.

He thought the poets of the age were jealous of his genius, and strove to crush it accordingly, while the rest of mankind wanted tafte sufficient to discern it. For my own part, I profess myself one of these; and, as the Clown in Billy Shakespear says of the courtier's oath, Had I fworn by the doctor's genius, that the pancakes were naught, they might have been, for all that, very good, yet shouldn't I have been forsworn. Let that be as it will, he retired from town in great dudgeon, and fet up his rest near a hill in Derbyshire, with two tops resembling Parnaffus, and a well at the bottom, which he had chriftened Hyp-o-the-Green. Egad! if he stays in that habitation, 'tis my opinion he'll foon grow green with the . hip indeed. He'll be glad of an opportunity to return to the flesh pots of Egypt, and pay his court to the flighted queen Cleopatra. Ha! well remembered, by this light you shall know, my good Sir, that this same Egyptian princess has been courted by so many gallants of taste, that, as I hope to live, I found myself in fome fort of dilemma, because, in parting with her to one, I should have disobliged all his rivals. Now, a man would not choose to give offence to his friends, at least I lay it down as a maxim, to avoid the smallest appearance of ingratitude. Perhaps I may be in the wrong. But every man has his way. For this reason, I proposed to all the candidates, that a lottery or raffle should be set on foot, by which every individual would have an equal chance for her good graces, and the prize be left to the decision of Fortune. The scheme was mightily relished, and the terms being such a trifle as half a guinea, the whole town crowded into my house in order to subscribe. But there I was their humble fervant. Gentlemen, you must have a little patience till till my own particular friends are ferved. Among that number, I do myself the honour to consider Mr Pickle. Here is a copy of the proposals; and if the list should be adorned with his name, I hope, notwithstanding his merited success among the young ladies, he will for once be shunned by that little vixen called Miss Fortune:—He, he, he!"

So faying, he bowed with a thousand apish congees, and presented his paper to Peregrine, who seeing the number of subscribers was limited to one hundred, said, he thought him too moderate in his expectations, as he did not doubt that his picture would be a cheap purchase at five hundred, instead of fifty pounds, at which the price was fixed. To this unexpected remark Pallet answered, that among the connoisseurs he would not pretend to appraise his picture; but that, in valuing his works, he was obliged to have an eye to the Gothic ignorance of the age in which he lived.

Our adventurer faw at once into the nature of this raffle, which was no other than a begging shift to difpose of a paltry piece that he could not otherwise have fold for twenty shillings. However, far from shocking the poor man in diffress, by dropping the least hint of his conjecture, he defired to be favoured with fix chances, if the circumstances of his plan would indulge him fo far; and the painter, after some hesitation, condescended to comply with his request, out of pure friend. ship and veneration; though he observed, that in so doing he must exclude some of his most intimate companions. Having received the money, he gave Pickle his address, defiring he would, with his convenience, visit the princess, who, he was fure, would display her most engaging attractions, in order to captivate his fancy; and took his leave, extremely well pleafed with the fuccess of his application.

Though

pe

an

th

th

his

Vai

Though Peregrine was tempted with the curiofity of feeing this portrait, which he imagined must contain some analogy to the ridiculous odity of the painter, he would not expose himself to the disagreeable alternative of applauding the performance, contrary to the distates of conscience and common sense; or as condemning it, to the unspeakable mortification of the miserable author; and therefore never dreamt of returning the painter's visit, nor did he ever hear of the lottery's being drawn.

About this time he was invited to spend a few weeks at the country-seat of a certain nobleman, with whom he had contracted an acquaintance in the course of his debauches, which we have already described. His lordship being remarkable for his skill and success in horse-racing, his house was continually filled with the connoisseurs and admirers of that sport, upon which the whole conversation turned, insomuch that Peregrine gradually imbibed some knowledge in horse slesh, and the diversions of the course; for the whole occupation of the day, exclusive of eating and drinking, consisted in viewing, managing, and exercising his lordship's stud.

Our hero looked upon these amusements with an eye of taste, as well as curiosity; he contemplated the animal as a beautiful and elegant part of the creation, and relished the surprising exertion of its speed with a residued and classical delight. In a little time, he became personally acquainted with every horse in the stable, and interested himself in the reputation of each; while he also gratisted his appetite for knowledge, in observing the methods of preparing their bodies, and training them to the race. His lordship saw and encouraged his eagerness, from which he promised himself some advantage; he formed several private matches for his entertainment tertainment, and flattered his discernment, by permitting him to be successful in the first bets he made.

Thus was he artfully decoyed into a spirit of keenness and adventure, and disposed to depend upon his own judgment, in opposition to that of people who had made horse-racing the sole study of their lives. He accompanied my Lord to New-Market, and entering at once into the genius of the place, was marked as fair game by all the knowing ones there assembled, many of whom sound means to take him in, in spite of all the cautions and admonitions of his lordship, who wanted to reserve him for his own use.

It is almost impossible for any man, let him be ever so fearful or phlegmatic, to be an unconcerned spectator in this bufy scene. The dæmon of play hovers in the air, like a pestilential vapour, tainting the minds of all present with infallible infection, which communicates from one person to another, like the circulation of a general panic. Peregrine was feized with this epidemic distemper to a violent degree; and after having loft a few loofe hundreds, in his progress through all the various rookeries of the place, entered into partnership with his noble friend in a grand match, upon the issue of which he ventured no less than three thousand pounds. Indeed he would not have risked such a confiderable sum, had not his own confidence been reinforced by the opinion and concurrence of his lordship, who hazarded an equal bet upon the same event. two affociates engaged themselves, in the penalty of fix thousand pounds, to run one chaise and four against another, three times round the course; and our adventurer had the fatisfaction of feeing his antagonist distanced in the first and second heat; but all of a sudden one of the horses of his machine was knocked up, by which accident the victory was ravished almost from his very grasp, and he was obliged to endure the damage and the scorn.

He was deeply affected with this misfortune, which he imputed to his own extravagance and temerity, but discovered no external signs of affliction, because his illustrious partner bore his loss with the most philosophic resignation, consoling himself, as well as Pickle, with the hope of making it up on some other occasion. Nevertheless, our young gentleman could not help admiring, and even envying his equanimity, not knowing that his Lordship had managed matters so as to be a gainer by the missortune, which, to retrieve, Peregrine purchased several horses at the recommendation of his friend; and, instead of returning to London, made a tour with him to all the celebrated races in England, at which, after several vicissitudes of fortune, he made shift, before the end of the season, to treble his loss.

But his hopes seemed to increase with his ill luck. In the beginning of winter he came to town, fully perfuaded that fortune must necessarily change, and that next feafon he should reap the happy fruits of his experience. In this confidence he feemed to drown all ideas of prudence and œconomy. His former expence was mere parfimony compared with that which he now incurred. He subscribed to the opera, and half a dozen concerts at different parts of the town; was a benefactor to feveral hospitals, purchased a collection of valuable pictures, took an house and furnished it in a most magnificent tafte, laid in a great flock of French wines, and gave extravagant entertainments to his quality-friends, who, in return, loaded him with compliment, and infifted upon his making use of their interest and goodwill.

CHAP. LXXXIX.

He is taken into the protection of a great man; fets up for a member of parliament; is disappointed in his expectation, and finds himself egregiously outwitted.

A MONG these professed patrons, the greatest part of whom Peregrine faw through, there was one great personage, who seemed to support with dignity the fphere in which fortune had placed him. His behaviour to Pickle was not a feries of grinning complaifance in a flat repetition of general expressions of friendthip and regard. He demeaned himfelf with a feemingly honest referve, in point of profession . his advances to Peregrine appeared to be the result of deliberation and experiment; he chid the young gentlman for his extravagance, with the authority of a parent, and the fincerity of a fast friend; and having, by gradual enquiries, made himfelf acquainted with the state of his private affairs, condemned his conduct with an air of candour and concern. He represented to him the folly and dangerous consequences of the profligate life in which he had plunged himfelf, counfelled him with great warmth to fell off his race-horses, which would otherwise insensibly eat him up; to retrench all superfluous expence, which would only ferve to expose him. to the ridicule and ingratitude of those who were benefited by it; to lay out his money upon fecure mortgages, at good interest; and carry into execution his former defign of flanding candidate for a borough at the enfuing election for a new parliament; in which cafe this nobleman promised to affift him with his influence. and advice, affuring him, that if he could once procure a feat

a feat in the House, he might look upon his fortune as already made. Our adventurer perceived the wisdom and fanity of this advice, for which he made his acknowledgments to his generous monitor, protesting that he would adhere to it in every particular, and immediately fet about a reformation. He accordingly took cognizance of his most minute affairs, and after an exact forutiny, gave his patron to understand, that, exclusive of his furniture, his fortune was reduced to fourteen thousand three hundred and thirty pounds in Bank and South-fea annuities, over and above the garrison and its appendages, which he reckoned at fixty pounds a-year. He therefore defired, that as his lordship had been so kind as to. favour him with his friendship and advice, he would extend his generofity fill farther, by putting him in a way of making the most advantage of his money. My Lord faid, that, for his own part, he did not choose to meddle in money matters; that Mr Pickle would find abundance of people ready to borrow it upon land fecurity, but that he ought to be extremely cautious in a transaction of such consequence; promising, at the same time, to employ his own iteward in feeking out a mortgager to whom it might be fafely lent.

This agent was accordingly fet to work, and for a few days made fruitless inquiry; so that the young gentleman was obliged to have recourse to his own intelligence, by which he got notice of several people of reputed credit, who offered him mortgages for the whole sum; but when he made a report of the particulars to his noble friend, his lordship frarted such doubts and objections relating to each, that he was deterred from entering into any engagements with the proposers; congratulating himself, in the mean time, on his good fortune, in being sayoured with the advice and direction of fuch a fage counsellor. Nevertheless, he began to be impatient, after having unsuccessfully consulted all the money-brokers and conveyancers about town, and resolved to try the expedient of a public advertisement. But he was persuaded by my lord to postpone that experiment, until every other method should have failed, because it would attract the attention of all the pettifoggers in London, who (though they might not be able to over-reach) would infallibly harass and teaze him out of all tranquillity.

It was on the back of this conversation that Peregrine, chancing to meet the fleward near his lord's house, flopped him in the fireet, to give him an account of his bad luck; at which the other expressed some concern, and rubbing his chin with his hand, in a muling posture, told Pickle there was a thought just come into his head, pointing out one way of doing his business effectually. The youth, upon this intimation, begged he would accompany him to the next coffee-house, in which having chofen a private fituation, this grave manager gave him to understand, that a part of my lord's estate was mortgaged, in consequence of a debt contracted by his grandfather, for provision to the younger children of the family, and that the equity of redemption would be foreclosed in a few months, unless the burden could be discharged. "My lord (said he) has always lived in a splendid manner, and notwithstanding his ample fortune, together with the profits accruing from the posts he enjoys, he faves so little money, that, upon this occasion, I know he will be obliged to borrow ten thousand pounds to make up the sum that is requifite to redeem the mortgage. Now, certain I am, that when his defign comes to be known, he will be folicited on all hands by people defirous of lending money upon fuch undoubted fecurity; fecurity; and 'tis odds but he has already promifed the preference to some particular acquaintance. However, as I know he has your interest very much at heart, I will (if you please) found his lordship upon the subject, and in a day or two give you notice of my fuccess."

Peregrine, ravished with the prospect of settling this affair fo much to his fatisfaction, thanked the steward for his friendly hint and undertaking, which he affured him should be acknowledged by a more folid proof of his gratitude, provided the bufiness could be brought to bear; and next day he was vifited by this kind manager, with the happy news of his lordship's having confented to borrow ten thousand pounds of his stock, upon mortgage, at the interest of five per cent. This information he received as an inflance of the fingular efteem of his noble patron; and the papers being immediately drawn and executed, the money was deposited in the hands of the mortager, who, in the hearing of the lender, laid firong injunctions on his fleward to pay the interest punctually at quarter-day.

The best part of our hero's fortune being thus happily deposited, and the agent gratified with a present of fifty pieces, he began to put his retrenching scheme in execution: all his fervants (Pipes excepted) were difcharged, his chariot and running horses disposed of, his house-keeping broke up, and his furniture fold by auction; nay, the heat of his disposition was as remarkable in this as in any other transaction of his life; for every step of his faving project was taken with fuch eagerness and even precipitation, that most of his companions thought he was either ruined or mad. But he answered all their expollulations with a ftring of prudent apcphthegms, such as, "The shortest follies are the best :" " Better to retrench upon conviction than compulfion;" and livers other wife maxims, feemingly the refult of experience experience and philosophic reflection. To such a degree of enthusiasm did his present acconomy prevail, that he was actually seized with the desire of amassing; and as he every day received proposals from those brokers whom he had employed about the disposal of his cash, he at length ventured fifteen hundred pounds upon bottomry, being tempted by the excessive premium.

But it must be observed, for the honour of our adventurer, that this reformation did not at all interfere with the good qualities of his heart : He was still as friendly and benevolent as ever, though his liberality was more subject to the restraint of reason; and he might have justly pleaded, in vindication of his generofity, that he retrenched the superfluities in his own way of living, in order to preferve the power of affifting his fellow-creatures in distress. Numberless were the objects to which he extended his charity in private. Indeed he exerted this virtue in fecret, not only on account of avoiding the charge of offentation, but also because he was ashamed of being detected in such an awkward unfailionable practice, by the cenforious obfervers of this humane generation. In this particular he feemed to confound the ideas of virtue and vice; for he did good as other people do evil, by stealth; and was fo capricious in point of behaviour, that frequently, in public, he wagged his tongue in fatirical animadverfions upon that poverty which his hand had in private relieved. Yet, far from flunning the acquaintance, or discouraging the folicitations of those who, he thought, wanted his affistance, he was always accessible, open, and complacent to them, even when the haughtiness of his temper kept his superiors at a distance; and often faved a modest man the anguish and confusion of declaring himfelf, by penetrating into his necessity, and anticipating

can't

anticipating his request, in a frank offer of his purfe and friendship.

Not that he practifed this beneficence to all the needy of his acquaintance, without distinction: there is always a set of idle profligate fellows, who, having squandered away their own fortunes, and conquered all sense of honour and shame, maintain themselves by borrowing from those who have not yet finished the same career, and want resolution to resist their importunate demands. To these he was always inslexible, though he could not absolutely detach himself from their company, because, by dint of effrontery, and such of their original connections as they have been able to retain, they find admission to all places of fashionable resort.

Several unfuccessful attacks had been made upon his pocket by beggars of this class. One of the most artful of them having one day joined him in the Mall, and made the usual observation on the weather, damned all the fogs of London, and began a differtation on the difference of air, preferring that of the country in which he was born to any climate under the fun. you ever in Gloucestershire?" (said he to Peregrine), who replying in the negative, he thus went on: " I have got a house there, where I should be glad to see you. Let us go down together during the Easter holidays: I can promife you good country fare and wholesome exercise; for I have every thing within myself, and as good a pack of fox-hounds as any in the three kingdoms. I shan't pretend to expatiate upon the elegance of the house, which, to be fure, is an old building; and thefe, you know, are generally cold, and not very convenient. But curse the house! the dirty acres about it are the thing, and a damn'd fine parcel they are to be fure. If my old grandmother was dead-fhe can't live another season, for she's turned of sourscore, and quite wore out; nay, as for that matter, I believe I have got a letter in my pocket, giving an account of her being despaired of by the doctors. Let me see—No, d—n it, I lest it at home in the pocket of another coat.

Pickle, who from the beginning of this harangue faw its tendency, feemed to yield the most ferious attention to what he faid, breaking in upon it, every now and then, with the interjections, Hum! Ha! The deuce! and feveral civil questions, from which the other conceived happy omens of fuccess, till perceiving they had advanced as far as the passage into St James's, the mischievous youth interrupted him all at once, faying, " I fee you are for the end of the walk : this is my way." With these words he took his leave of the saunterer. who would have delayed his retreat, by calling to him aloud, that he had not yet described the situation of his castle. But Peregrine, without stopping, answered in the same tone, " Another time will do as well;" and in a moment disappeared, leaving the projector very much mortified with his disappointment; for his intention was, to close the description with a demand of twenty pieces, to be repaid out of the first remittance he should receive from his estate.

It would have been well for our hero, had he always afted with the same circumspection; but he had his unguarded moments, in which he sell a prey to the unsuspecting integrity of his own heart. There was a person among the number of his acquaintances, whose conversation he particularly relished, because it was frank, agreeable, and fraught with many sensible observations upon the crast and treachery of mankind. This gentleman had made shift to discuss a very genteel fortune, though it was spent with taste and reputation, and now he was reduced to his shifts for the maintenance of his family, which consisted of a wife and child. Not that he was destitute of the necessaries of life, being comfortably supplied by the bounty of his friends; but this was a provision not at all suited to his inclination; and he had endeavoured, by divers unsuccessful schemes, to retrieve his former independency.

Peregrine'happened one evening to be fitting alone in a coffee-house, where he overheard a conversation between this schemer and another gentleman, touching an affair that engaged his attention. The stranger had been left truftee for fifteen hundred pounds, bequeathed to the other's daughter by an aunt, and was strongly folicited to pay the money to the child's father, who affured him he had then an opportunity to lay it out in fuch a manner as would greatly conduce to the advantage of his family. The truftee reminded him of the nature of his charge, which made him accountable for the money, until the child should have attained the age of eighteen; but at the fame time gave him to understand, that if he could procure such security as would indemnify him from the confequences, he would forthwith pay the legacy into his hands. To this propofal the father replied, that it was not to be supposed he would risk the fortune of his only child upon any idle scheme or precarious iffue; and therefore he thought it reasonable that he should have the use of it in the mean time; and that, as to fecurity, he was loath to trouble any of his friends about an affair which might be compromifed without their interpolition; observing, that he would not look upon his condescension as a favour, if obtained by a fecurity, on which he could borrow the same sum from any userer in town.

After much importunity on one fide, and evafion on the other, the moneyed gentleman told him, that though he would not furrender the fum deposited in his hands & for the use of his daughter, he would lend him what he should have occasion for in the mean time; and if, upon her being of age, he should be able to obtain her concurrence, the money should be placed to her account, provided he could find any person of credit who would join with him in a bond for the affurance of the lender. This proviso was an obstruction which the other would not have been able to furmount without great difficulty, had not his cause been espoused by our hero, who thought it was a pity a man of honour and understanding should suffer in his principal concerns on fuch a paltry confideration. He therefore, prefuming on his acquaintance, interposed in the conversation as a friend, who interested himself in the affair; and being fully informed of the particulars, offered himfelf as a fecurity for the lender.

This gentleman being a stranger to Peregrine, was next day made acquainted with his sands; and, without farther scruple, accommodated his friend with one thousand pounds, for which he took their bond payable in six months, though he protested that the money should never be demanded until the infant should be of age, unless some accident should happen which he could not then foresee. Pickle believed this declaration sincere, because he could have no interest in dissembling; but what he chiefly depended upon for his own security, was the integrity and considence of the borrower who assured him, that happen what would, he should be able to stand between him and all danger; 'the nature of his plan being such as would infallibly treble the sum in a very few months.

In a little time after this transaction, writs being iffued out for electing a new parliament, our adventurer by the advice of his patron, went into the country in order to canvals for a borough, and lined his pockets with a competent share of bank-notes for the occafion. But in this project he unfortunately happened to interfere with the interest of a great family in the opposition, who, for a long series of years, had made members for that place; and were now fo much offended at the intrusion of our young gentleman, that they threatened to fpend ten thousand pounds in frustrating his defign. This menace was no other than an incitement to Peregrine, who confided fo much in his own influence and address, that he verily believed he should be able to baffle his Grace, even in his own territories. By that victory he hoped to effablish his reputation and interest with the minister, who, through the recommendation of his noble friend, countenanced his caufe, and would have been very well pleased to see one of his greatest enemies suffer such a disgraceful overthrow, which would have, moreover, in a great measure, shaken his credit with his faction.

Our hero, intoxicated with the ideas of pride and ambition, put all his talents to the test in the execution of this project. He fpared no expence in treating the electors; but finding himfelf rivalled, in this respect, by his competitor, who was powerfully supported, he had recourse to those qualifications in which he thought himself superior. He made balls for the ladies, visited the matrons of the corporation, adapted himfelf to their various humours with furprifing facility, drank with those who loved a cherithing cup in private, made love to the amorous, prayed with the religious, goffiped with those who delighted in scandal, and with great lagacity contrived agreeable prefents to them all. This was the most essectual method of engaging such electors as were under the influence of their wives. As for the reft, he affailed them in their own way, fetting whole hogsheads of beer and wine abroach, for the benefit of all comers; and, into those fordid hearts that liquor would not open, he found means to convey himself by the help of a golden key.

R

While he thus exerted himself, his antagonist was not idle; his age and infirmities could not permit him to enter personally into their parties; but his steward and adherents bestirred themselves with great industry and perseverance. The market for votes ran so high, that Pickle's ready money was exhausted before the day of election; and he was obliged to write to his patron an account of the dilemma to which he was reduced; intreating him to take such speedy measures as would enable him to finish the business which he had so happily begun.

This nobleman communicated the circumstances of the case to the minister, and in a day or two our candidate found credit with the receiver general of the county, who lent him twelve hundred pounds on his personal note, payable on demand. By means of this new fupply, he managed matters fo fuccessfully, that an evident majority of votes was secured in his interest; and nothing could have obstructed his election, had not the noble peer who fet up his competitor, in order to avoid the shame and mortification of being foiled in his own borough, offered to compromise the affair with his honour, by giving up two members in another place, provided the opposition should cease in his own corpo-This propofal was greedily embraced. the eve of election, Peregrine received an intimation from his patron, defiring him to quit his pretentions, on pain of his and the minister's displeasure, and promising that he should be elected for another place.

No other disappointment in life could have given him such chagrin as he felt at the receipt of this tantalizing fizing order, by which the cup of fuccess was fnatched from his lip, and all the vanity of his ambitious hope humbled in the dust. He cursed the whole chain of his court-connections, inveighed with great animosity against the rascally scheme of politics to which he was facrificed; and in conclusion, swore he would not give up the fruits of his own address for the pleasure of any minister upon earth. This laudable resolution, however, was rendered ineffectual by his friend the receivergeneral, who was bearer of the message, and (after having in vain endeavoured to persuade him to submission) fairly arrested him upon the spot for the money he had advanced; this expedient being performed by virtue of a writ which he had been advised to take out in case the young man should prove refractory.

The reader, who by this time must be pretty well acquainted with the disposition of our adventurer, may eafily conceive how he relished this adventure. At first, all the faculties of his foul were fwallowed up in aftonishment and indignation; and some minutes clapfed before his nerves would obey the impulse of his rage, which manifested itself in such an application to the temples of the plaintiff, as laid him sprawling on the floor. This affault, which was committed in a tavern. whether he had been purposely decoyed, attracted the regard of the bailiff and his followers, who, to the number of four, rufied upon him at once, in order to overpower him; but his wrath inspired him with such addivional firength and agility, that he difengaged himfelf from them in a trice, and feizing a poker, which was the first weapon that presented itself to his hand, exercifed is up an their fkulls with incredible dexterity and execution. The officer himfelf, who had been the first that prefumed to lay violent hands upon him, felt the first effects of his fury, in a blow upon the jaws, in con-VOL. IV. fequence fequence of which he loft three of his teeth, and fell athwart the body of the receiver with which he formed the figure of a St. Andrew's cross. One of his myrmidons feeing the fate of his chief, would not venture to attack the victor in front, but, wheeling to one fide, made an attempt upon him in flank, and was received obliquely by our hero's left hand and foot, fo mafterly disposed to the right side of his leg, and the left side of his neck, that he bolted head foremost into the chimney, where his chin was encountered by the grate, which, in a moment, seared him to the bone. The rest of the detachment did not think proper to maintain the dispute, but evacuating the room with great expedition, locked the door on the outfide, and bellowed aloud to the receiver's fervants, befeeching them to come to the assistance of their master, who was in danger of his life.

Meanwhile, this gentleman having recollected himfelf, demanded a parley; which having with difficulty obtained of our incenfed candidate, in confequence of the most submissive application, he complained grievously of the young gentleman's intemperance and heat of disposition, and very calmly represented the danger of his rashness and indiscretion. He told him, that nothing could be more outragious or idle, than the refistance he had made against the laws of his country, because he would find it impracticable to withfland the whole executive power of the county, which he could eafily raife to apprehend and secure him; that, over and above the difgrace that would accrue to him from this imprudent conduct, he would knock his own interest on the head, by disobliging his friends in the administration, who were, to his knowledge, at prefent very well dispoied to do him service; that, for his own part, what he had done was by the express order of his superiors, and not out of any defire of distressing him; and that, far from being his enemy, notwithstanding the shocking insult he had sustained, he was ready to withdraw the writ, provided he would listen to any reasonable terms of accommodation.

Peregrine, who was not more prone to anger, than open to conviction, being appealed by his condescenfion, moved by his arguments, and chid by his own reflection for what he had done in the precipitation of his wrath, began to give ear to his remonstrances; and, the bailiffs being ordered to withdraw, they entered into a conference, the result of which was, our adventurer's immediate departure for London; so that next day his competitor was unanimously chosen, because no body appeared to oppose his election.

The discontented Pickle, on his arrival in town, went directly to the house of his patron, to whom, in the anguish of his disappointment, he bitterly complained of the treatment he had received; by which, besides the diffrace of his overthrow, he was no less than two thousand pounds out of pocket, exclusive of the debt for which he stood engaged to the receiver. His lordship, who was prepared for the exposulation, on his knowledge of the young man's impetuous temper, answered all the articles of his charge with great deliberation, giving him to understand the motives that induced the minister to quit his interest in that borough; and soothing him with affurances that his loss would be amply rewarded by his honour, to whom he was next day introduced by this nobleman, in the warmest style of recommendation. The minister, who was a pattern of complaifance, received him with the most engaging affability; thanked him very kindly for his endeavours to Support and strengthen the interest of the administration. and faithfully promised to lay hold on the first opportunity to express the sense he had of his zeal and attachment; defired to see him often at his levee, that, in the multiplicity of business, he might not be in danger of forgetting his services and deserts.

CHAP. XC.

Peregrine commences minister's dependent; meets by accident with Mrs Gauntlet, and descends gradually in the condition of life.

Peregrine, who had too much discernment to be cajoled with general promises, at a time when he thought himself entitled to the most particular assurance. He accordingly signified his disgust to his introductor, giving him to understand, that he had laid his account with being chosen representative of one of those boroughs for which he had been sacrificed. His Lordship agreed to the reasonableness of his expectation, observing, however, that he could not suppose the minister would enter upon business with him on his sirst visit; and that it would be time enough, at his next audience, to communicate his demand.

Notwithstanding this remonstrance, our hero continued to indulge his suspicion and chagrin, and even made a point of it with his patron, that his lordship should next day make application in his behalf, lest the two seats should be filled up, on pretence of his inclinations being unknown. Thus importanted, my lord went to his principal, and returned with an answer, importing, that his honour was extremely forry that Mr Pickle had not signified his request before the boroughs in question question were promised to two gentlemen whom he could not disappoint with any regard to his own credit or interest; but as several persons who would be chosen were, to his certain knowledge, very aged and infirm, he did not doubt that there would be plenty of vacant seats in a very short time, and then the young gentleman might depend upon his friendship.

Peregrine was so much irritated at this intimation, that, in the first transports of his anger, he forgot the respect he owed to his friend, and, in his presence, inveighed against the minister as a person devoid of gratitude and candour, protesting, that if ever an opportunity should offer itself, he would spend the whole remains of his fortune in opposing his measures. nobleman having given him time to exhaust the impetuofity of his passion, rebuked him very calmly for his difrespectful expressions, which were equally injurious and indifcreet; affored him, that his project of revenge, if ever put in execution, would redound to his own prejudice and confusion; and advised him to cultivate and improve, with patience and affiduity, the footing he had already obtained in the minister's good graces.

Our hero, convinced of the truth, though not fatisfied with the occasion of his admonitions, took his leave in a fit of fullen discontent, and began to ruminate upon the shattered posture of his affairs. All that now remained of the ample fortune he had inherited, was the sum he had deposited in his Lordship's hands, together with fifteen hundred pounds he had ventured on bottomry, and the garrison, which he had left for the use and accommodation of the Lieutenant; and, on the per contra side of his accompt, he was debtor for the supply he had received from the receiver general, and the money for which he was bound in behalf of his friend;

⒀

fo that he found himself, for the first time of his life, very much embarassed in his circumstances; for, of the first half year's interest of his ten thousand, which, was punctually paid, he had but fourscore pounds in the bank, without any prospect of a farther supply until the other term, which was at the distance of four long months. He seriously resected upon the uncertainty of human affairs. The ship with his fisteen hundred pounds might be lost; the gentleman, for whom he was security, might miscarry in this as well as in his former projects, and the minister might one day, through policy or displeasure, expose him to the mercy of his dependent, who was in possession of his notes-

These suggestions did not at all contribute to the ease of our adventurer's mind, already russed by his disappointment. He cursed his own folly and extravagance, by which he was reduced to such an uncomfortable situation. He compared his own conduct with that of some young gentlemen of his acquaintance, who, while he was squandering away the best part of his inheritance, had improved their fortunes, strengthened their interest, and increased their reputation. He was abandoned by his gaiety and good humour, his countenance gradually contracted itself into a representation of severity and care, he dropped all his amusements, and the companions of his pleasure, and turned his whole attention to the minister, at whose levee he never failed to appear.

While he thus laboured in the wheel of dependence, with all that mortification which a youth of his pride and fensibility may be supposed to feel from such a disagreeable necessity, he one day heard himself called by name as he crossed the Park; and, turning, perceived the wife of Captain Gauntlet with another lady. He no sooner recognized the kind Sophy, than he accossed her with his wonted civility of friendship; but his former sprightly air was metamorphosed into such austerity, or rather dejection of feature, that the could fcarce believe her own eyes, and, in her aftonishment, "Is it possible (faid she) that the gay Mr Pickle should be fo much altered in such a short space of time!" He made no other reply to this exclamation; but by a languid fmile; and asked how long the had been in town; obferving, that he would have paid his compliments to ber at her own lodgings, had he been favoured with the least intimation of her arrival. After having thanked him for his politenels, the told him, it was not owing to any abatement of her friendship and esteem for him, that the had omitted to give him that notice; but his abrupt departure from Windsor, and the manner in which he quitted Mr Gauntlet, had given her just grounds to believe that they had incurred his displeafure; which suspicion was re-inforced by his long filence and neglect from that period to the present time. She observed, it was still farther confirmed by his forbearing to enquire for Emilia and her brother: " Judge then, (faid she) if I had any reason to believe that you would be pleafed to hear that I was in town. However, I will not detain you at prefent, because you seem to be engaged about some particular business; but if you will favour me with your company at breakfail to-morrow. I shall be much pleased, and honoured to boot, by the vifit." So faying, the gave him a direction to her lodgings; and he took his leave with a faithful promife of iceing her at the appointed time.

He was very much affected with this advance of Sophy, which he confidered as an inftance of her uncommon fweetness of temper; he felt strange longings of returning friendship towards Godfrey; and the remembrance of Emilia melted his heart, already softened with grief and mortification. Next day he did not neglect his engagement, and had the pleasure of enjoying a long conversation with this sensible young lady, who gave him to understand, that her husband was with his regiment; and presented to him a fine boy, the first-fruits of their love, whom they had christened by the name of Peregrine, in memory of the friendship which had subsisted between Godfrey and our youth.

➂

This proof of their regard, notwithstanding the ihterruption in their correspondence, made a deep impression upon the mind of our adventurer, who, having made the warmest acknowledgments for this undeserved mark of respect, took the child in his arms, and almost devoured him with kiffes, protesting before God, that he should always consider him with the tenderness of a parent. This was the highest compliment he could pay to the gentle Sophy, who again kindly chid him for his disdainful and precipitate retreat immediately after her marriage, and expressed an earnest desire of feeing him and the captain reconciled. He affured her, nothing could give him greater fatisfaction than fuch an event, to which he would contribute all that lay in his power, though he could not help looking upon himfelf as injured by Captain Gauntlet's behaviour, which denoted a fuspicion of his honour, as well as contempt for his understanding. The lady undertook for the concession of her husband, who (she told him) had been extremely forry for his own heat, after Mr Pickle's departure, and would have followed him to the garrifon, in order to folicit his forgiveness, had not he been restrained by certain punctilios, occasioned by some acirmonious expressions that dropt from Peregrine at the inn.

After having cleared up this mifunderstanding, she proceeded to give an account of Emilia, whose behaviour, at that juncture, plainly indicated a continuance of affection for her first lover; and defired, that he would give her full powers to bring that matter also to an accommodation; "For I am not more certain of my own existence (said she) than that you are still in possession of my sister's heart." At this declaration, the tear started in his eye; but he shook his head, and declined her good offices, withing that the young lady might be much more happy than ever he should be able to make her.

Mrs Gauntlet, confounded at these expressions, and moved by the desponding manner in which they were delivered, begged to know if any new obstacle was raifed by some late change in his sentiments or situation; and he, in order to avoid a painful explanation, told her, that he had long despaired of being able to vanquish Emilia's resentment, and for that reason quitted the purfuit, which he woold never renew, howfoever his heart might fuffer by that resolution; though he took heaven to witness, that his love, effeem, and admiration of her, were not in the least impaired : but the true motive of his laying afide his defign, was the consciousees of his decayed fortune, which, by adding to the fanfibility of his pride, increased the horror of another repulfe. She expressed her concern for this determination, both on his own account, and in behalf of Emilia, whose happiness (in her opinion) depended upon his constancy and affection; and she would have queltioned him more minutely about the flate of his affairs, had not he discouraged the inquiry, by seeking to introduce another subject of conversation.

After mutual protestations of friendship and regard, he promised to visit her often during her residence in town; and took his leave in a strange perplexity of mind.

mind, occasioned by the images of love intruding upon the remonstrances of carking care. He had some time ago forfaken those extravagant companions with whom he had rioted in the heyday of his fortune, and begun to confort with a graver and more fober species of acquaintance: but he now found himself disabled from cultivating the fociety of these also, who were men of ample estates, and liberal dispositions, in consequence of which, their parties were too expensive for the confumptive state of his finances; so that he was obliged to descend to another degree, and mingle with a set of old bachelors and younger brothers, who fubfifted on flender annuities, or what is called a bare competency in the public funds. This affociation was composed of fecond-hand politicians and minor critics, who, in the forencon faunter in the Mall, or lounge at shows of pictures, appear in the drawing-room once or twice a-week, dine at an ordinary, decide disputes in a coffee-house with an air of superior intelligence, frequent the pit of the play-house, and once in a month spend an evening with fome noted actor, whose remarkable fayings they repeat for the entertainment of their ordinary friends.

After all, he found something comfortable enough in the company of these gentlemen, who never interested his passions to any violence of transport, nor teased him with impertinent curiosity about his private affairs; for, though many of them had maintained a very long, close, and friendly correspondence with each other, they never dreamt of inquiring into particular concerns; and if one of the two who were most intimately connected had been asked how the other made a shift to live, he would have answered, with great truth, "Really, that is more than I know." Notwithstanding this phlegmatic indifference, which is of the true English production, they were all inossensive, good-natured people, who loved a joke, and a fong, delighted in telling a merry story, and prided themselves in the art of catering, especially in the articles of fish, venison, and wildfowl.

Our young gentleman was not received among them on the footing of a common member who makes interest for his admission; he was courted as a person of superior genius and importance, and his compliance looked upon as an honour to their fociety. This their idea of his pre-eminence was supported by his conversation, which, while it was more liberal and learned than that to which they had been accustomed, was tinctured with an affuming air, so agreeably diffused, that instead of producing aversion, it commanded respect. They not only appealed to him in all doubts relating to foreign parts, to which one and all of them were strangers, but also consulted his knowledge in history and divinity, which were frequently the topics of their debates: and in poetry of all kinds he decided with fuch magisterial authority, as even weighed against the opinions of the players The variety of characters he had feen and themselves. observed, and the high spheres of life in which he had fo lately moved, furnished him with a thousand entertaining anecdotes. When he became a little familiarized to his disappointment, so that his natural vivacity began to revive, he flashed among them in such a number of bright fallies, as struck them with admiration. and conflituted himself a classic in wit; infomuch that they began to retail his remnants, and even invited some particular friends to come and hear him hold forth. One of the players, who had for many years firutted about the taverns in the neighbourhood of Covent-garden as the Grand Turk of wit and humour, began to find his admirers melt away; and a certain petulant physician, who had shone at almost all the Portclubs clubs in that end of the town, was actually obliged to import his talents into the city, where he has now happily taken root.

Nor was this success to be wondered at, if we consider, that, over and above his natural genius and edueation, our adventurer still had the opportunity of knowing every thing which happened among the great, by means of his friend Cadwallader, with whom he still maintained his former intimacy; though it was now chequered with many occasional tifts, owing to the farcastic remonstrances of the misanthrope, who disapproved of those schemes which miscarried with Peregrine, and now took unfeafonable methods of valuing himself upon his own forefight; nay, he was, between whiles, like a raven, croaking prefages of more ill-luck from the deceit of the minister, the dissimulation of his patron, the folly of the projector for whom he was bound, the uncertainty of the feas, and the villany of those with whom he had entrufted his cash; for Crabtree saw and confidered every thing through a perspective spleen, that always reflected the worst fide of human pature.

For these reasons, our young gentleman began to be disgusted, at certain intervals, with the character of this old man, whom he now thought a morose cynic, not so much incensed against the sollies and vices of mankind, as delighted with the distress of his fellow-creatures. Thus he put the most unfavourable construction on the principles of his friend, because he found himself justly fallen under the lash of his animadversion. This self-accusation very often dissolves the closest friendship: a man, conscious of his own indiscretion, is implacably offended at the rectitude of his companion's conduct, which he considers as an insult upon his failings, never to be forgiven, even though he has not tasted the bitternels of reproof, which no finner can commodiously digest. The friendship, therefore, subfifting between Crabtree and Pickle, had of late suffered several fymptomatic shocks that feemed to prognosticate a total diffolution; a great deal of fmart dialogue had paffed in their private conversations, and the senior began to repent of having placed his confidence in fuch an imprudent, headstrong, ungovernable youth.

It was in fuch paroxisms of displeasure that he prophefied misfortune to Peregrine, and even told him one morning, that he had dreamed of the shipwreck of the two East-Indiamen on board of which he had hazarded his money. But this was no other than a falle vision; for, in a few weeks, one of them arrived at her moorings in the river, and he received a thousand in lieu of eight hundred pounds which he had lent upon bond to one of the mates. At the same time he was informed, that the other ship in which he was concerned, had, in all probability, loft her paffage for the feafon, by being unable to weather the Cape. He was not at all concerned at that piece of news, knowing, that the longer he should lie out of his money, he would have the more interest to receive; and finding his prefent difficulties removed by this supply, his heart began to dilate, and his countenance to refume its former alacrity.

This state of exultation, however, was soon interrupted by a small accident which he could not foresee: he was vifited one morning by the person who had lent his friend a thouland pounds on his fecurity, and given to understand, that the borrower had absconded, in consequence of a disappointment, by which he had loft the whole fum, and all hopes of retrieving it; fo that our hero was now liable for the debt, which he befought him to discharge according to the bond, that he (the lender) might not fuffer by his humanity. It may be VOL. IV. eafily easily conceived, that Peregrine did not receive this intelligence in cold blood. He cursed his own imprudence in contracting such an engagement with an adventurer whom he did not sufficiently know. They exclaimed against the treachery of the projector; and having for some time indulged his resentment in threats and imprecations, inquired into the nature of the scheme which had miscarried.

The lender, who had informed himself of the whole affair, gratified his curiofity in this particular, by telling him that the fugitive had been cajoled by a certain knight of the post, who undertook to manage the thoufand pounds in fuch a manner, as would in a very little time make him perfectly independent; and thus he delineated the plan: " One half of the fum (faid he) shall be laid out in jewels, which I will pawn to certain perfons of credit and fortune, who lend money upon fuch pledges at an exorbitant interest. The other shall be kept for relieving them, fo that they may be again deposited with a second set of those honourable usurers; and when they shall have been circulated in this manner through a variety of hands, we will extort money from each of the pawn-brokers, by threatening them with a public profecution for exacting illegal interest; and I know that they will bleed freely rather than be exposed to the infamy attending such an accusation." The scheme was feafible, and though not very honourable, made fuch an impression upon the needy borrower, that he affented to the propolal; and, by our hero's credit, the money was raifed. The jewels were accordingly purchased, pawned, relieved, and re-pledged by the agent who undertook to manage the whole affair: and so judiciously was the project executed, that he could have eafily proved each lender guilty of the charge. Having thus far successfully transacted the business, this faithful faithful agent visited them severally on his own account, to give them intimation, that his employer intended to sue them on the statute of usury; upon which, every one for himself bribed the informer to withdraw his evidence, by which alone he could be convicted; and having received these gratifications, he had thought proper to retreat into France, with the whole booty, including the original thousand that put them in motion. In consequence of this decampment, the borrower had withdrawn himself; so that the lender was obliged to have recourse to his security.

This was a very mortifying account to our young gentleman, who in vain reminded the narrater of his promife, importing, that he would not demand the money until he should be called to an account by his ward; and observed, that, long before that period, the fugitive might appear and discharge the debt. But the other was deaf to these remonstrances; alleging, that his promife was provisional, on the supposition that the borrower would deal candidly and fairly; that he had forfeited all title to his friendship and trust by the scandalous scheme in which he had embarked; and that his treacherous flight from his fecurity was no proof of his honesty and intended return; but, on the contrary, a warning by which he (the lender) was taught to take care of himself. He therefore insisted upon his being indemnified immediately, on pain of letting the law take its course; and Peregrine was actually obliged to part with the whole fum he had fo lately received. But this payment was not made without extreme reluctance, indignation, and denunciation of eternal war against the absconder and the rigid creditor, betwixt whom he fulspected some collusion.

CHAP. XCI.

Cadwallader acts the part of a comforter to his friend; and in his turn is confoled by Peregrine, who begins to find himself a most egregious dupe.

THIS new misfortune, which he justly charged to the account of his own folly, recalled his chagrin; and though he endeavoured with all his might to conceal the affair from the knowledge of Cadwallader, that prying observer perceived his countenance overcast. The projector's fudden disappearance alarming his fuspicion, he managed his enquiries with fo much art, that in a few days he made himself acquainted with every particular of the transaction, and resolved to gratify his spleen at the expence of the impatient dupe. this view he took an opportunity to accost him with a very ferious air, faying, A friend of his had immediate occasion for a thousand pounds, and as Peregrine had the exact fum lying by him, he would take it as a great favour if he would part with it for a few months on undoubted fecurity. Had Pickle known the true motive of his demand, he would in all likelihood have made a very difagreeble answer; but Crabtree had wrapt himfelf up to fecurely in the diffimulation of his features, that the youth could not possibly penetrate into his intention; and in a most galling suspence replied, that the money was otherwise engaged. The milanthrope, not contented with this irritation, presumed the prerogative of a friend, and questioned him so minutely about the disposal of the cash, that, after numberless evasions, which cost him a world of torture to invent, he could contain his vexation no longer, but exclaimed in a rage, " Damn

"Damn your impertinence! 'tis gone to the devil, and that's enough!" "Thereafter, as it may be, (said this tormentor, with a most provoking indifference of aspect,) I should be glad to know upon what footing, for I suppose you have some expectation of advantage from that quarter." "'Sdeath! Sir, (cried the impatient youth,) if I had any expectation from hell, I would make interest with you, for I believe from my soul you are one of its most favoured ministers upon earth." With these words he slung out of the room, leaving Cadwallader very well satisfied with the chastisement he had bestowed.

Peregrine having cooled himself with a solitary walk in the Park, during which, the violence of his choler gradually evaporated, and his reflection was called to serious deliberation upon the posture of his affairs, he resolved to redouble his diligence and importunity with his patron and the minister, in order to obtain some sinecure, which would indemnify him for the damage he had sustained on their account. He accordingly went to his Lordship, and signified his demand, after having told him, that he had suffered several fresh losses, which rendered an immediate provision of that fort necessary to his credit and subsistence.

His noble friend commended him for the regard he manifested for his own interest, which he considered as a proof of his being at last detached from the careless inadvertency of youth: he approved of his demand, which he assured him should be faithfully transmitted to the minister, and backed with all his insluence; and encouraged his hope, by observing, that some profitable places were at that time vacant, and, so far as he knew, unengaged.

This conversation helped to restore the tranquillity of Pickle's breast, though he still harboured resentment:

against Cadwallader, on account of the last infult; and on the inflant he formed a plan of revenge. He knew the mifanthrope's remittances from his estate in the country had been of late very scanty, in confequence of repairs and bankruptcies among his tenants; fo that, in spite of all his frugality, he had been but barely able to maintain his credit, and even that was engaged on the strength of his running rent. Being therefore intimately acquainted with the particulars of his fortune, he wrote a letter to Crabtree, subscribed with the name of his principal farmer's wife, importing, that her hufband being lately dead, and the greatest part of his cattle destroyed by the infectious distemper, she found herfelf utterly incapable of paying the rent which was due, or even of keeping the farm, unless he would, out of his great goodness, be pleased to give her some assistance, and allow her to fit free for a twelve-month to. come. This intimation he found means to convey by post from a market-town adjoining to the farm, directed in the usual style to the cynic, who, seeing it stamped. with the known marks, could not possibly suspect any imposition.

Hackneyed as he was in the ways of life, and fleeled with his boasted stoicism, this epistle threw him into such an agony of vexation, that a double proportion of souring was visible in his aspect when he was visited by the author, who, having observed and followed the postman at a proper distance, introduced a conversation upon his own disappointments, in which, among other circumstances of his own ill-luck, he told him, that his patron's steward had desired to be excused from paying the last quarter of his interest precisely at the appointed term; for which reason, he should be utterly void of cash; and therefore requested, that Crabtree would accommodate accommodate him with an hundred pieces out of his next remittance from the country.

This demand galled and perplexed the old man to. fuch a degree, that the muscles of his face assumed a contraction peculiary virulent, and exhibited the character of Diogenes with a most lively expression: he knew that a confession of his true fituation, would furnish Pickle with an opportunity to make reprifals upon him, with intolerable triumph; and that, by a downright refulal to supply his wants, he would for ever forfeit his friendship and esteem, and might provoke him. to take ample vengeance for his fordid behaviour, by exposing him, in his native colours, to the refentment of those whom he had so long deceived. These confiderations kept him fome time in a most rancorous state of fuspence, which Peregrine affected to misinterpret, by bidding him freely declare his fuspicion, if he did not think it fafe to comply with his request, and he would make thift elfewhere.

This feeming misconstruction increased the torture of the misanthrope, who, with the utmost irritation of feature, " Oons! (cried he) what villany have you noted in my conduct, that you treat me like a rascally ufarer?" Peregrine very gravely replied, that the queftion needed no answer; " for (said he) had I considered you as an userer, I would have come with a security. under my arm; but, all evasion apart, will you stead me! will you pleasure me? shall I have the money?" "Would it were in your belly with a barrel of gunpowder, (exclaimed the enraged cynic): fince I must be excruciated, read that plaguy paper !- 'Sblood! why didn't nature clap a pair of long ears and a tail upon me, that I might be a real ass, and champ thistles on some common, independent of my fellow-creatures? Would I were a worm, that I might creep into the earth, and thatch my habitation with a fingle straw; or rather rather a wasp or a viper, that I might make the rascally world feel my refentment. But why do I talk of rafcality? folly, folly is the scourge of life! Give me a scoundrel, (so he be a fensible one), and I will put him in my heart of hearts! but a fool is more mischievous than famine, pestilence and war. The ideotical hag that writes, or causes to be writ, this same letter, has ruined her family, and broke her husband's heart, by ignorance and mismanagement; and she imputes her calamity to Providence with a vengeance! and fo I am defrauded of three hundred pounds, the greatest part of which I owe to tradefmen whom I have promifed to pay this very quarter. Pox upon her, I would she were an horned beaft, that the diftemper might lay hold on her. The beldam has the impudence too, (after the has brought me into this dilemma), to folicit my assistance to flock the farm anew! Before God, I have a good mind to fend her an halter, and perhaps I might purchase another for myself, but that I would not furnish food for laughter to knaves and coxcombs."

Peregrine having perused the billet, and listened to this ejaculation, replied with great composure, he was assaumed to see a man of his years and pretentions to philosophy so russed by a trifle. "What signify all the boasted hardships you have overcome (said he) and the shrewd observations you pretend to have made on human nature? Where is that stoical indifference you affirm you have attained, if such a paltry disappointment can disturb you in this manner? What is the loss of three hundred pounds, compared with the missortunes which I myself have undergone within these two years? Yet you will take upon you to act the censor, and inveigh against the impatience and impetuosity of youth, as if you yourself had gained an absolute conquest over all the passions of the heart. You was so kind :

kind as to infult me t'other day in my affliction, by reproaching me with indifcretion and misconduct; suppose I were now to retort the imputation, and ask, How a man of your prosound sagacity could leave your fortune at the discretion of ignorant peasants? How could you be so blind as not to foresee the necessity of repairs, together with the danger of bankruptcy, murrain, or thin crop? Why did not you convert your land into ready money, and (as you have no connections in life) purchase an annuity, on which you might have lived at your ease, without any fear of the consequence.
Can't you, from the whole budget of your philosophy, cull one apophthegm to console you for this trival mischance?"

"Rot your rapidity! (said the cynic, half-choaked with gall), if the cancer or the pox were in your throat, I should not be thus tormented with your tongue, and yet a magpye shall speak infinitely more to the purpose. Don't you know, Mr Wiseacre, that my case does not fall within the province of philosophy? Had I been curtailed of all my members, racked by the gout and gravel, deprived of liberty, robbed of an only child, or visited with the death of a dear friend like you, philosophy might have contributed to my consolation; but will philosophy pay my debts, or free me from the burden of obligation to a set of fellows whom I despise? Speak—pronounce—demonstrate—or may Heaven close your mouth for ever!"

"These are the comfortable fruits of your misanthropy, (answered the youth), your laudable scheme of detaching yourself from the bonds of society, and of moving in a superior sphere of your own. Had not you been so peculiarly sage, intent upon laughing at mankind, you could never have been disconcerted by such a pitiful inconvenience. Any friend would have accommodated you with the sum in question. But now the world may retort the laugh; for you stand upon such an agreeable footing with your acquaintance, that nothing could please them better than an account of your having given disappointment the slip, by the help of a noose properly applied. This I mention by way of hint, upon which I would have you chew the cud of reslection; and, should it come to that issue, I will use my whole interest with the coroner, to bring in his verdict lunacy, that your carcase may have christian burial."

commodated

So faying, he withdrew, very well fatisfied with the revenge he had taken, which operated so violently upon Crabtree, that, if it had not been for the sole consideration mentioned above, he would, in all probability, have had recourse to the remedy proposed. But his unwillingness to oblige and entertain his sellow-creatures hindered him from practising that expedient, till, by course of post he was happily undeceived with regard to the situation of his assairs; and that information had such an effect upon him, that he not only forgave our hero for the stratagem, which he immediately ascribed to the right author, but also made him a tender of his purse: so that matters, for the present, were brought to an amicable accommodation.

Meanwhile, Peregrine never flacked in his attendance upon the great: he never omitted to appear upon every levec-day, employed his industry and penetration in getting intelligence of posts that were unfilled, and every day recommended himself to the good offices of his patron, who seemed to espouse his interest with great cordiality: nevertheless, he was always too late in his application, or the place he demanded chanced to be out of the minister's gift.

These intimations, though communicated in the most

warm

warm profesiions of friendship and regard, gave great umbrage to the young gentleman; who confidered them as the evafions of an infincere courtier, and loudly complained of them as fuch to his lordship; fignifying, at the same time, an intention to fell his mortgage for ready money, which he would expend to the last farthing in thwarting his Honour in the very first election he should patronize. His lordship never wanted a proper exhortation upon these occasions: he did not now endeavour to pacify him with affurances of the minister's favour, because he perceived that these medicines had, by repeated use, lost their effect upon our adventurer, whose menaces he now combated, by reprefenting, that the minister's purse was heavier than that of Mr Pickle; that therefore, should he make a point of opposing his interest, the youth must infallibly fail in the contest; in which case he would find himself utterly destitute of the means of subfistence, and confequently precluded from all hope of provision.

This was an observation, the truth of which our young gentleman could not pretend to doubt, though it did not at all tend to the vindication of his Honour's conduct. Indeed, Pickle began to suspect the sincerity of his patron, who, in his opinion, had trifled with his impatience, and even eluded, by forry excuses, his defire of having another private audience of the first mover. His lordship also began to be less accessible than usual; and Peregrine had been obliged to dun the fleward with repeated demands, before he could finger the last quarter of his interest.

Alarmed by these considerations, he went and confulted the nobleman, whom he had obliged in the affair of his fon, and had the mortification to hear but a very indifferent character of the person in whom he had so long confided. This new adviser, who (though a courti-

er) was a rival of the other, gave our adventurer to understand, that he had been leaning upon a broken reed: that his professed patron was a man of a shattered fortune and decayed interest, which extended no farther than a smile and a whisper; that, for his own part, he would have been proud of an opportunity to use his influence with the minister in behalf of Mr Pickle; "but fince you have put yourfelf under the protection of another peer, (faid he) whose connections interfere with mine, I cannot now espouse your cause, without incurring the imputation of feducing that nobleman's adherents, a charge, which, of all others, I would most carefully avoid. However, I shall always be ready to affift you with my private advice, as a specimen of which, I now counsel you to infift upon having another interview with Sir Steady Steerwell himself, that you may in person explain your pretensions, without any risk of being misrepresented; and endeavour, if possible, to draw him into fome particular promife, from which he cannot retract with any regard to his reputation: for general profession is a necessary armour, worn by all ministers in their own defence against the importunity of those whom they will not befriend, and would not disoblige."

This advice was so conformable to his own sentiments, that our adventurer seized the first opportunity to demand an hearing; and plainly told his patron, that if he could not be indulged with that savour, he should look upon his lordship's influence to be very small, and his own hopes to be altogether desperate: in which case, he was resolved to dispose of the mortgage, purchase an annuity, and live dependent.

CHAP. XCII.

He is indulged with a second audience by the minister, of whose sincerity he is convinced. His pride and ambition revive, and again are mortified.

The young gentleman's money had been in other hands, perhaps the peer would have been at very little pains, either in gratifying his demand, or opposing his revenge; but he knew that the fale of the mortgage could not be effected, without an inquiry, to which he did not wish to be exposed. He therefore employed all his interest in procuring the solicited audience. This being granted, Peregrine, with great warmth and elocution, expatiated upon the injury his fortune had suffered in the affair of the borough for which he had stood candidate: he took notice of the disappointment he had sustained in the other election, reminded him of the promises with which he had been amused, and, in conclusion, desired to know what he had to expect from his favour.

The minister having patiently heard him to an end, replied with a most gracious aspect, that he was very well informed of his merit and attachment, and very much disposed to convince him of the regard which he paid to both: that, till of late, he did not know the nature of his expectations, neither had he the power of creating posts for those whom he inclined to serve: but if Mr Pickle could chalk out any feesible method by which he could manifest his sentiments by friendship, he should not be backward in executing the plan.

Peregrine, laying hold on this declaration, mentioned feveral places which he knew to be vacant; but the old evalion was fill used: one of them was not in his Vol. IV.

G department

department of business, another had been promised to the third fon of a certain earl before the death of the last possessor, and a third was incumbered with a penfion that ate up a good half of the appointments. fhort, fuch obstructions were started to all his proposals, as he could not possibly furmount; though he plainly perceived they were no other than specious pretexts to cover the mortifying fide of a refusal. Exasperated. therefore, at this lack of fincerity and gratitude, "I can eafily forefee, (faid he) that fuch difficulties will never be wanting when I have any thing to ask; and for that reason will save myself the trouble of any farther application. So faying, he withdrew in a very abrupt manner, breathing defiance and revenge. But his patron, who did not think proper to drive him to extremities, found means to perfuade his Honour, to do fomething for the pacification of the young man's choler; and that same evening our adventurer received a meffage from his lordship, defiring ro fee him immediately.

In consequence of this intimation, Pickle went to his house, and appeared before him with a very cloudy aspect, which signified to whom it might concern, that his temper was at present too much galled to endure reproof; and therefore the sagacious peer forbore taking him to task for his behaviour during the audience he had obtained; but gave him to understand, that the minister, in consideration of his services, had sent him a bank-note of three hundred pounds, with a promise of a like sum yearly, until he could be otherwise provided for. This declaration in some measure appealed the youth, who condescended to accept the present; and next levee-day made his acknowledgment to the donor, who savoured him with a smile of infinite complacency, which entirely dissipated all the remains of his resentment; for, as he could not possibly divine the true cause of his being temporized with, he looked upon this condescension as an undoubted proof of Sir Steady's sincerity, and sirmly believed, that he would settle him in some place with the first opportunity, rather than continue to pay this pension out of his own pocket. In all probability his prediction would have been verified, had not an unforeseen accident in a moment overwhelmed the bark of his interest at court.

Y

0

Meanwhile, this thort gleam of good fortune recalled the ideas of pride and ambition which he had formerly cherished. His countenance was again lifted up, his good humour retrieved, and his mien re-exalted. Indeed he began to be confidered as a rifing man by his fellow-dependents, who faw the particular notice with which he was favoured at the public levee; and some of them, for that reason, were at pains to court his good graces. He no longer thunned his former intimates, with whom a good part of his fortune had been fpent, but made up to them in all places of public refort, with the same ease and familiarity as he had been used to expreis, and even re-imbarked in some of their excesses upon the strength of his sanguine expectation. Cadwallader and he renewed their confultations in the court of ridicule; and divers exploits were archieved, to the confusion of those who had failed into the north of their dipleasure.

But these enjoyments were soon interrupted by a missociume equally satal and unexpected; his noble patron was seized with an apoplectic sit, from which he was recovered by the physicians, that they might dispatch him according to rule; and, in two months after they were called, he went the way of all sless. Peregrine was very much afflicted at this event, not only on account of his friendship for the deceased, to whom he thought himself under many and great obligations, but lso, because he seared that his own interest would suffer a severe shock, by the removal of this nobleman, whom he considered as its chief support. He put himself therefore in mourning, out of regard to the memory of his departed friend, and exhibited genuine marks of sorrow and concern; though he had, in reality, more cause to grieve than he as yet imagined.

When quarter-day came about, he applied to the steward of his lordship's heir for the interest of his money, as usual; and the reader will readily own he had some reason to be surprised, when he was told he had no claim either to principal or interest. True it is, the manager talked very civilly as well as sensibly upon the subject. "Your appearance, Sir, (said he to Pickle) screens you from all suspicion of an intended fraud; but the mortgage upon those lands you mention, was granted to another person many years before you pretend to have lent that sum; and I have, this very morning, paid one quarter's interest, as appears from this receipt, which you may peruse for your satisfaction.

Peregrine was so thunderstruck at this information, which stripped him of his all, that he could not utter one word; a circumstance that did no great honour to his character, in the opinion of the steward, who, in good earnest, began to entertain some doubts of his integrity; for, among the papers of the deceased, which he had examined, there was no writing, memorandum, or receipt, relating to this incumbrance. After a long pause of stupesaction, Peregrine recollected himself so far as to observe, that either he was egregiously mislaken, or the predecessor of his lord the greatest villain upon earth. "But, Mr Whatd'yecallum, (said he) you must give me leave to tell you, that your bare as fertion, fertion, in this affair, will by no means induce me to put up quietly with the loss of ten thouland pounds."

12

f.

7,

).

5

0

e

Having thus expressed bimsels, he retired from the house, so discontented at this demur, that he scarce knew whether he moved upon his hands or heels; and the park chancing to lie in his way, he sauntered about, giving year to soliloquy in praise of his departed friend, the burden of which was a string of incoherent curses imprecated upon himsels; till his transports, by degrees, and may not his restection, he deliberated seriously and terrovalusly upon his missortune, and resolved to consult have essauthment loss of time. But, first of all, he proposed to make personal application to the heir, who, by a condition problem of the case, might be inclined and de him justice.

In consequence of this determination, he next morn ing put his writings in his pocket, and went in a chair to the house of the young nobleman, to whom being admitted by virtue of his appearance, and a small gratification to the power, he explained the whole affair, corroborating his affections with the papers which he produced, and describing the diffrace that would be entailed upon the memory of the deceased, should he be obliged to seek redress in a public court of justice.

The executor, who was a person of good breeding, condoled him upon his loss with great good nature, though he did not seem much surprised at his account of the matter; but wished, that since the fraud must have been committed, the damage had fallen upon the first mortgager, who (he said) was a thievish usurer, grown rich by the distresses of his fellow-creatures. In answer to our hero's remonstrances, he observed, that he did not look upon himself as obliged to pay the least regard to the character of his predecessor, who had used him with great barbarity and injustice, not only in excluding him from his countenance and assistance, but also in prejudicing his inheritance, as much as lay in his power, so that it could not be reasonably expected that he would pay ten thousand pounds of his debt, for which he had received no value. Peregrine, in spite of his chagrin, could not help owning within himself, that there was a good deal of reason in this resulat. After having given loose to his indignation, in the most violent invectives against the defunct, he took his leave of the complaisant heir, and had immediate recourse to the advice of counsel, who assured him that he had an excellent plea, and was accordingly retained in the cause.

All these measures were taken in the first vigour of his exertion, during which his spirits were so flustered with the diversity of passions produced by his mischance, that he mistook for equanimity that which was no other than intoxication; and two whole days elapfed before he attained a due sense of his misfortune. Then indeed he underwent a woful felf-examination: every circumstance of the inquiry added fresh pangs to his resection; and the refult of the whole was, a discovery that his fortune was totally confumed, and himself reduced to a flate of the most deplorable dependence. This fuggestion, alone, might (in the anguish of his despondency) have driven him to some desperate course, had it not been in some measure qualified by the confidence of his lawyers, and the affurance of the minister, which (slender as the world have generally found them) were the only bulwarks between mifery and him.

The mind is naturally pliable, and, provided it has the least hope to lean upon, adapts itself wonderfully to the emergencies of fortune, especially when the imagination is gay and luxuriant. This was the case with our adventurer; instead of indulging the melancholy ideas which his loss inspired, he had recourse to the flattering delusions of hope, soothing himself with the unsubstantial plans of future greatness, and endeavouring to cover what was past with the veil of oblivion.

17

.

t

After some hefitation, he resolved to make Crabtree acquainted with his misfortune, that once for all he might pass the ordeal of his fatire, without subjecting himself to a long series of sarcastic hints and doubtful allufions, which he could not endure. He accordingly took the first opportunity of telling him that he was absolutely ruined by the perfidy of his patron, and defired that he would not aggravate his affliction, by those cynical remarks which were peculiar to men of his mifanthropical disposition. Cadwallader listened to this declaration with internal furprife, which, however, produced no alteration in-his countenance; and, after some paufe, observed, that our hero had no reason to look for any new observation from him upon this event, which he had long foreseen, and daily expected; and exhorted him, with an ironical fneer, to confole himfelf with the promise of the minister, who would doubtless discharge the debts of his deceafed bosom-friend.

CHAP. XCIII.

Peregrine commits himself to the public, and is admitted member of a college of authors.

THE bitterness of this explanation being past our young gentleman began to revolve within himself schemes for making up the deficiencies of his yearly income, which was now so grievously reduced, and determined termined to profit in some shape or other by those talents which he owed to nature and education. He had, in his affluence, heard of feveral authors, who, without any pretentions to genius or human literature, earned a very genteel fubfiltence, by undertaking work for book. fellers, in which, reputation was not at all concerned. One (for example) professed all manner of translation at so much per sheet, and actually kept five or fix amanuenfes continually employed, like fo many clerks in a compting-house; by which means he was enabled to live at his eafe, and enjoy his friend and his bottle, an bitious of no other character than that of an honest man and a good neighbour. Another projected a variety of plans for new dictionaries, which were executed under his eye by day-labourers; and the province of a third was history and voyages, collected or abridged by under-Arappers of the fame class.

Mr Pickle, in his comparisons, paid such deference to his own capacity, as banished all doubts of his being able to excel any of those undertakers in their different branches of profession, if ever he should be driven to that expedient; but his ambition prompted him to make his interest and glory co-incide, by attempting some performances which should do him honour with the public, and at the fame time establish his importance among the copy-purchasers in town. With this view he worshipped the muse; and conscious of the little regard which is in this age paid to every species of poetic composition, in which neither fatire nor obscenity occurs, he produced an imitation of Juvenal, and lashed some conspicuous characters with equal truth, spirit, and feverity. Though his name did not appear in the titlepage of this production, he managed matters to, as that the work was univerfally imputed to the true author, who was not altogether disappointed in his expectations of success; for the impression was immediately sold off, and the piece became the subject of conversation in all assemblies of taste.

t

n

1-

17

0

1

664

•

This happy exordium not only attracted the addresses of the booksellers, who made interest for his acquaintance, but also roused the notice of a society of authors, who altyled themselves the college, from which he was honoured with a deputation, offering to enrol him a member by unanimous consent. The person employed for this purpose being a bard who had formerly tasted of our hero's bounty, used all his elequence to persuade him to comply with the advances of their fraternity, which he described in such a manner, as instanced the curiosity of Pickle, who dismissed the embassador, with an acknowledgment of the great honour they conferred upon him, and a faithful promise of endeavouring to merit the continuance of their approbation.

He was afterwards, by the same minister, instructed in the ceremonies of the college; and, in consequence of his information, composed an ode, to be publicly recited on the evening of his intro action. He underflood that this institution was no other than a body of authors, incorporated by mutual confent, for their joint advantage and fatisfaction, opposed to another affembly of the tame kind, their avoiced enemies and detractors. No wonder then, that they lought to ftrengthen them. selves with such a valuable acquibition as our hero was like to prove. The college confided of authors only, and these of all degrees in point of reputation, from the tabricator of a fong fet to music, and fung at Marybene, to the dramatic bard who had appeared in bulkins upon the stage; nay, one of the members had actually finithed eight books of an epic poem, for the publication of which he was at that time toliciting fubfcriptions.

It cannot be supposed that such a congregation of the fons of Apollo would fit a whole evening with order and decorum, unless they were under the check of some · established authority; and this inconvenience having been foreseen, they had elected a president, vested with fuil power to filence any member or members, that should attempt to disturb the harmony and subordination of the whole. The fage who at this time possessed the chair, was a perfon in years, whose countenance was a lively portraiture of that rancorous discontent which follows repeated damnation. He had been extremely unfortunate in his theatrical productions, and was (to use the words of a profane wag, who assisted at the condemnation of his last plea) by this time damn'd beyond redemption. Nevertheless, he still tarried about the Skirts of Parnaffus, translating some of the classics, and writing miscellanies; and, by dint of an invincible asfurance, fupercilious infolence, the most undaunted virulence of tongue, and fome knowledge of life, he made shift to acquire and maintain the character of a man of learning and wit, in the opinion of people who had neither; that is, thirty nine in forty of those with whom he affeciated himfelf. He was even looked upon in this light by some few of the college, though the major part of those who favoured his election, were such as dreaded his malice, respected his experience and seniority, or hated his competitor, who was the epic poet.

The chief end of this fociety (as I have already hinted) was to affit and support each other in their productions, which they mutually recommended to sale with all their art and influence, not only in private conversation, but also in occasional epigrams, criticisms, and advertisements inserted in the public papers. This science, which is known by the vulgar appellation of pussing, they carried to such a pitch of finesse, that an author very often wrote an abusive answer to his own performance, performance, in order to inflame the curiofity of the town by which it had been overlooked. Notwithstanding this general unanimity in the college, a private animofity had long fubfifted between the two rivals I have mentioned, on account of precedence, to which both laid claim, though, by a majority of votes, it had been decided in favour of the prefent chairman. The grudge indeed never proceeded to any degree of outrage or defiance, but manifested itself at every meeting, in attempts to eclipse each other in fmart fayings, and pregnant repartee; fo that there was always a delicate mess of this kind of wit ferved up in the front of the evening, for the entertainment and example of the junior members, who never failed to divide upon this occasion, declaring themfelves for one or other of the combatants, whom they encouraged by their looks, geftures, and applause, according to the circumstances of the dispute.

f

This honourable confiftory was held in the best room of an ale-house, which afforded wine, punch, or beer, fuitable to the purse or inclination of every individual, who separately paid for his own choice; and here was our hero introduced in the midft of twenty firangers, who, by their looks and equipage, formed a very picturefque variety. He was received with a most gracious folemuity, and placed upon the right hand of the prefident, who having commanded filence, recited aloud his introductory ode, which met with univerfal approbation. Then was tendered to him the cultomary oath, obliging him to confult the honour and advantage of the fociety, as far as it should lie in his power, in every flation of life; and this being taken, his temples were bound with a wreath of laurel, which was kept facred for fuch inauguration.

When these rites were performed with all due cere-

E

13

n

2,

B

mony, the new member cast his eyes around the place. and took a more accurate furvey of his brethren; among whom he observed a strange collection of periwigs, which, with regard to the colour, fashions, and dimenfions, were fuch as he had never feen before. who fat on each fide, nearest the president, were generally diffinguished by venerable ties, the foretops of which exhibited a furprifing diversity; some of them rose flanting backwards, like the glacis of a fortification; fome were elevated in two diffinct eminences, like the hills Helicon and Parnassus; and others were curled, and reflected as the horns of Jupiter Ammon. Next to thefe, the majors took place, many of which were mere fuccedanea, made by the application of an occasional rose to the tail of a lank bob; and in the lower form appeared maffes of hair which would admit of no description.

Their clothes were tolerably well fuited to the furniture of their heads, the apparel of the upper bench being decent and clean, while that of the second class was threadbare and folid; and, at the lower end of the room, he perceived divers efforts made to conceal their rent breeches and dirty linens; nay, he could diftinguish by their countenances, the different kinds of poetry in which they exercised the muse; he saw Tragedy conspicuous in a grave solemnity of regard. Satire lowering in a frown of envy and discontent, Elegy whining in a funeral aspect, Pastoral dozing in a most infipid langour of face, Ode-writing delineated in a diffracted stare, and Epigram squinting with a pert Perhaps our hero refined too much in his penetration, when he affirmed, that, over and above these discoveries, he could plainly perceive the state of every one's finances, and would have undertaken to have guessed gueffed each particular fum, without varying three farthings from the truth.

The conversation, instead of becoming general, began to fall in parties; and the epic poet had actually attracted the attention of a private committee, when the chairman interposed, calling aloud, "No cabals, no conspiracies, gentlemen." His rival thinking it incumbent upon him to make him some reply to this rebuke, answered, "We have no secrets; he that hath ears, let him hear." This was spoke as an intimation to the company, whose looks were instantly whetted with the expectation of their ordinary meal: but the president seemed to decline the contest; for, without putting on his sighting sace, he calmly replied, that he had seen Mr Metaphor tip the wink, and whisper to one of his consederates, and thence judged that there was something mysterious on the carpet.

The epic poet, believing his antagonist crest-fallen. refolved to take the advantage of his dejection, that he might enhance his own character in the opinion of the ftranger, and with that view asked, with an air of exultation, if a man might not be allowed to have a convulfion in his eye, without being suspected of a conspiracy? The prefident perceiving his drift, and piqued at his prefumption, "To be fure, (said he), a man of a weak head may be very well supposed to have convalfions in his eyes." This repartee produced a laugh of triumph among the chairman's adherents: one of whom observed, that his rival had got a smart rap on the pate. " Yes, (replied the bard), in that respect Mr Chairman has the advantage of me. Had my head been fortified with a horn-work, I should not have been so fenfible of the stroke." This retort, which carried a fevere allusion to the president's wife, lighted up the countenances of the aggressor's friends, which had begun to be a little obumbrated; and had a contrary effect upon the other faction, till their chief, collecting all his capacity, returned the falute, by observing, that there was no occasion for an horn-work when the covered way was not worth defending.

⒀

Such a reprizal upon Mr Metaphor's yoke-fellow. who was by no means remarkable for her beauty, could not fail to operate upon the hearers; and as for the bard himself, he was evidently ruffled by the reflection; to which, however, he without hefitation, replied, " Egad! 'tis my opinion, that if your covered way was laid open, few people would venture to give the affault." " Not unless their batteries were more effectual than the fire of your wit," (faid the prefident.) " As for that matter, (cried the other with precipitation), they would have no occasion to batter in breach; they would find the angle of the lapucelle bastion demolished to their hand; he, he!" " But I believe it would furpass your understanding, (resumed the chairman), to fill up the fossé." "That, I own, is impracticable, (replied the bard); there I should meet with an biatus maxime deflendus!"

The president, exasperated at this insiduation in presence of the new member, exclaimed with indignation in his looks, "And yet, if a body of pioneers were set at work upon your, skull, they would find rubbish enough to chook up all the common-sewers in town."
Here a groan was uttered by the admirers of the epic poet, who, taking a pinch of souff with great composure,
"When a man grows scurrilous, (said he), I take it for an undoubted proof of his overthrow." "If that be the case, (cried the other), you yourself must be the vanquished party; for you was the first that was driven to personal abuse." "I appeal (answered the bard)

the

bard) to those who can distinguish. Gentlemen, your judgment !"

This reference produced an universal clamour, and the whole college was involved in confusion. Every man entered into dispute with his neighbour on the merits of this cause. The chairman interposed his authority in vain; the noise grew louder and louder; the disputants waxed warm; the epithets of blockhead, fool, and fcoundrel, were bandied about. Peregrine enjoyed the uproar, and, leaping upon the table, founded the charge to battle, which was immediately commenced in ten different duels. The lights were extinguished; the combatants threshed one another without distinction; the mischievous Pickle distributed fundry random blows in the dark; and the people below, being alarmed with the found of application, the overturning of chairs, and the outcries of those who were engaged, came up stairs in a body, with lights, to reconnoitre, and, if possible, quell this hideous tumult.

Objects were no sooner rendered visible, than the field of battle exhibited strange groupes of the standing and the fallen. Each of Mr Metaphor's eyes was surrounded with a circle of a livid hue; and the president's nose distilled a quantity of clotted blood. One of the tragic authors, finding himself assaulted in the dark, had, by way of a poniard, employed upon his adversary's throat a knife, which lay upon the table for the convenience of cutting cheese; but, by the blessing of God, the edge of it was not keen enough to enter the skin, which it had only scratched in divers places. A satirist had almost bit off the ear of a lyric-bard. Shirts and neckcloths were torn to rags; and there was such a woful wreck of periwigs on the sloor, that no examination could adjust the property of the owners, the greatest part of whom were obliged to use handkerchiefs by way of night caps.

H 2

The fray, however, ceased at the approach of those who interposed; part of the combatants being tired of an exercise in which they had received nothing but hard blows; part of them being intimidated by the remonstrances of the landlord and his company, who threatened to call the watch; and a very few being as shamed of the scandalous dispute in which they were detected. But though the battle was ended, it was impossible, for that evening, to restore harmony and good order to the society, which broke up after the president had pronounced a short and confused apology to our adventurer, for the indecent uproar which had unfortunately happened on the first night of his admission.

Indeed, Peregrine deliberated with himself, whether or not his reputation would allow him to appear again among this venerable fraternity; but as he knew some of them to be men of real genius, how ridiculous soever their carriage might be modified, and was of that laughing disposition, which is always seeking food for mirth, as Horace observes of Philippus, herefolved to frequent the college, notwithstanding this accident which happened at his inauguration; being thereto, moreover, induced by his desire of knowing the private history of the stage, with which he supposed some of the members perfectly well acquainted. He was also visited before the next meeting by his introductor, who assured him that such a tumult had never happened since the first institution of the assembly till that very night; and promised, that for the suture he should have no cause to be scandalized at their behaviour.

Risus undique quarit,

Perfunded

Perfuaded by these motives and assurances, he trusted himself once more in the midst of their community, and every thing proceeded with great decorum; all dispute and altercation was avoided, and the college applied itself seriously to the purposes of its meeting, namely, to hear the grievances of individuals, and assist them with salutary advice. The first person that craved redress was a noisy North Briton, who complained (in a strange dialect) that he had, in the beginning of the season, presented a comedy to the manager of a certain theatre, who, after it had lain six weeks in his hands, returned it to the author, affirming there was neither sense nor English in the performance.

0

e

.

d

t

r-

r

1e

er h-

h,

13

ıg

he

ed

Ie

-0

re:

V1-

cd

The president, (who, by the bye, had revised the piece) thinking his own reputation concerned, declared, in presence of the whole society, that, with regard to fense, he would not undertake to viadicate the pro. duction; but, in point of language, no fault could be justly laid to its charge: " The case, however, is very plain, (faid he) the manager never gave himfelf the trouble to peruse the play, but formed a judgment of it from the conversation of the author, never dreaming that it had undergone the revifal of an English writer: be that as it will, you are infinitely obliged to him for having dispatched you so soon, and I shall have the better opinion of him for it fo long as I live; for I have known otherguise authors than you (that is in point of interest and fame) kept in continual attendance and dependence during the best part of their lives, and after all disappointed in the expectation of seeing their performances exhibited on the stage.

CHAP. XCIV.

Further proceedings of the college.

THIS affair was no sooner discussed, than another gentleman exhibited a complaint, fignifying that that he had undertaken to translate into English a certain celebrated author, who had been cruelly mangled by former attempts; and that, as foon as his defign took air, the proprietors of those miserable translations had endeavoured to prejudice his work, by industrious infinuations, contrary to truth and fair-dealing, importing, that he did not understand one word of the language which he pretended to translate. This being a case that nearly concerned the greatest part of the audience, it was taken into ferious deliberation; fome obferved, that it was not only a malicious effort against the plaintiff, but also a spiteful advertisement to the public, tending to promote an inquiry into the abilities. of all other translators, few of whom (it is well known) were so qualified as to fland the test of such examination. Others faid, that over and above this confideration, which ought to have its due weight with the college, there was a necessity for concerning measures to humble the presumption of booksellers, who had, from time immemorial, taken all opportunities to oppress and entlave their authors; not only by limiting men of genius to the wages of journeymen taylors, without even allowing them one fabbath in the week, but also in taking such advantages of their necessities as were inconfiftent with justice and humanity. " For example (faid one of the men bers) after I myfelf had acquired a little reputation with the town, I was caraffed by one of those tyrants, who professed a friendship for me, and even supplied me with money, according to the exigencies of my fituation; fo that I looked upon him as the mirror of difinterested benevolence; and, had he known my disposition, and treated me accordingly, I should have writ for him upon his own terms. After I had used his friendship in this manner for fome time, I happened to have occasion for a small sum of money, and with great confidence made another application to my good friend; when all of a fudden he put a stop to his generofity, refusing to acommodate me in the most abrupt and mortifying style; and though I was at that time pretty far advanced in a work for his benefit, which was a fufficient fecurity for what I owed him, he roundly asked how I proposed to pay the money. which I had already borrowed. Thus was I used, like a young whore just come upon the town, whom the bawd allows to run into her debt, that she may have it in her power to oppress her at pleasure; and if the sufferer complain, the is treated like the most ungrateful wretch upon earth; and that too with fuch appearance of reason, as may easily mislead an unconcerned spectator. "You unthankful drab! (she will fay), didn't I take you into my house when you hadn't a thift to your back, a petticoat to your tail, nor a morfel of bread to put into your belly? Ha'n't I clothed you from head to foot like a gentlewoman; supported you, with board, lodging, and all necessaries, till your own extravagance hath brought you into diffres? and now you have the impudence, you nafty flinking brimftone bungaway! to fay you are hardly dealt with, when I demand no more than my own?" Thus the whore and the author is equally oppressed, and even left without the melancholy privilege of complaining; fo that they are fain to subscribe to such terms as their creditors shall please to impose,"

This illustration operated so powerfully upon the conviction and refentment of the whole college, that revenge was universally denounced against those who had aggrieved the plaintiff; and, after some debate, it was agreed, that he should make a new translation of some other saleable book, in opposition to a sormer version belonging to the delinquents; and print it in such a small size, as would enable him to undersell their property; and that this new translation should be recommended and introduced into the world with the whole art and influence of the society.

This affair being fettled to the fatisfaction of all prefent, an author of some character stood up, and craved the advice and affiftance of his fellows, in punishing a certain nobleman of great pretentions to tafte, who, in confequence of a production which this gentleman had ushered into the world with universal applause, not only defired, but even eagerly courted his acquaintance. " He invited me to his house, (said he), where I was overwhelmed with civility and professions of friendship. He infifted upon my treating him as an intimate, and calling upon him at all hours without ceremony: he made me promise to breakfast with him at least three times a-week. In short, I looked upon myself as very fortunate, in meeting with fuch advances from a man of his interest and reputation, who had it in his power to befriend me effectually in my passage through life; and that I might not give him any cause to think I neglected his friendship, I went to his house in two days, with a view of drinking chocolate, according to appointment: but he had been fo much fatigued with dancing at an affembly over-night, that his valet de chambre would not venture to wake him fo early; and I left my compliments to his Lordship, with a performance in manuscript, which he had expressed a most eager defire to perufe. I repeated my visit next morning, that his impatience to fee me might not have some violent effeet upon his constitution; and received a message from his minister, signifying, that he had been highly entertained with the manuscript I had left, a great part of which he had read, but was at present so busy in contriving a proper dress for a private masquerade which would be given that fame evening, that he could not have the pleasure of my company at breakfast. was a feafible excuse, which I admitted accordingly, and in a day or two appeared again, when his lordship was particularly engaged. This might possibly be the case; and therefore I returned the fourth time, in hopes of finding him more at leifure : but he had gone out a. bout half an hour before my arrival, and left my performance with his valet de chambre, who affured me that his lord had perused it with infinite pleasure. Perhaps I might have retired very well fatisfied with this declaration, had not I, in my passage through the hall heard one of the footmen, upon the top of the stair case, pronounce with an audible voice, " Will your lordship please to be at home when he calls?" It is not to be supposed that I was pleased at this discovery, which I no fooner made, than turning to my conductor, "I find, (faid I), his lordship is disposed to be abroad to more people than me this morning." The fellow (tho? a valet de chambre) blushed at this observation, and I withdrew, not a little irritated at the peer's difingenuity, and fully resolved to spare him my visits for the future. It was not long after this occasion that I happened to meet him in the Park, and being naturally civil, I could not pass him without a salutation of the hat, which he returned in the most distant manner, tho? we were both folitary, and not a foul within view; and when that very performance, which he had applauded fo warmly, was lately published by subscription, he did not bespeak so much as one copy. I have often reflected with wonder upon this inconsistency in his conduct. I never courted his patronage, nor indeed thought of his name, until he made interest for my acquaintance; and, if he was disappointed in my conversation, why did he press me so much to further connection?"

"The cafe is very clear, (cried the chairman, interrupting him), he is one of those connoisseurs who set up for tafte, and value themselves upon knowing all men of genius, whom they would be thought to affift in their productions. I will lay an even bet with any man, that his Lordship, on the strength of that slender interview, together with the opportunity of having feen your performance in manuscript, has already hinted to every company in which he is conversant, that you folicited his affiftance in relouching the piece which you have now offered to the public, and that he was pleased to favour you with his advice, but found you obstinately bigotted to your own opinion, in some points relating to those very passages which have not met with the approbation of the town. As for his careffes, there was nothing at all extraordinary in his behaviour. By the time you have lived to my age, you will not be furprifed to fee a courtier's promife and performance of a different complexion; not but that I would willingly act as an auxiliary in your refentment.

The opinion of the president was strengthened by the concurrence of all the members; and all other complaints and memorials being deferred till another sitting, the college proceeded to an exercise of wit, which was generally performed once every fortnight, with a view to promote the expectoration of genius. The subject was occasionally chosen by the chairman, who opened the game with some shrewd remark naturally arifing from the conversation; and then the ball was toffed about from one corner of the room to the other, according to the motions of the spirit.

That the reader may have a just idea of this fport, and of the abilities of those who carried it on, I shall repeat the fallies of this evening, according to the order and succession in which they escaped. One of the members observing that Mr Metaphor was absent, was told by the person that fat next to him, that the poet had foul weather at home, and could not fir abroad. "What! (faid the prefident interpoling, with the fignal upon his countenance), is he wind-bound in port?" " Wine-bound, I suppose", (cried another.) " Hooped wine! a strange metaphor!" (faid the third.) " Not if he has got into a hogshead," (auswered a fourth.) "The hogshead will somer get into him, (replied a fifth); it must be a tun or an ocean." " No wonder then if he should be overwhelmed," (said a sixth.) " If he should, (cried a seventh) he will cast up when his gall breaks." "That must be very soon, (roared an eighth) for it has been long ready to burst." " No. no, (observed a ninth) he'll stick fast at the bottom, take my word for it; he has a natural alacrity in finking." "And yet, (remarked a tenth) I have feen him in the clouds." " Then he was cloudy, I fuppose," (cried the eleventh.) " So dark, (replied the other) that his meaning could not be perceived." "For all that, (faid the (welfth) he is easy feen through." "You talk (answered the thirteenth) as if his head was made of glass." " No, no, (cried a fourteenth) his head is made of more durable stuff; it will bend before it breaks." "Yet I have feen it broken," (resumed the prefident.) "Did you perceive any wit come out at the hole?" (faid another.) "His wit (replied the chairman) is too fubtile to be perceived."

A third

B

A third mouth was just opened, when the exercise was fuddenly interrupted by the dreadful cry of fire, which issued from the kitchen, and involved the whole college in confusion. Every man endeavouring to be the first in making his exit, the door and passage were blocked up; each individual was pummelled by the person that happened to be behind him. This communication produced noise and exclamation; clouds of fmoke rolled upwards into the apartment, and terror fat on every brow; when Peregrine, feeing no prospect of retreating by the door, opened one of the windows, and fairly leapt into the ffreet, where he found a crowd of people affembled to contribute their affiftance in extinguishing the flames. Several members of the college followed his example, and happily accomplished their escape: the chairman himself, being unwilling to use the fame expedient, stood trembling on the brink of the descent, dubious of his own agility, and dreading the consequence of such a leap, when a chair happening to pals, he laid hold on the opportunity, and, by an exertion of his muscles, pitched upon the top of the carriage, which was immediately overturned in the kennel, to the grievous annoyance of the fare, which happened to be a certain effeminate beau, in full dress, on his way to a private affembly.

This phantom hearing the noise overhead, and feeling the shock of being overthrown, at the same time, thought that some whole tenement had sallen upon the chair, and, in the terror of being crushed to pieces, uttered a scream which the populace supposed to proceed from the mouth of a woman, and therefore went to his assistance, while the chairmen, instead of ministering to his occasions, no sooner recollected themselves, than they ran in pursuit of their overthrower, who, being accustomed to escape from bailiss, dived into a dark alley,

ife

re,

ole

be ere

he

u.

of

fat

of

nd

of

inge

eir

ise

of

ng

ng

X.

ir.

el,

ed

is

1.

e,

ne

t-

d

15

0

n

alley, and, vanishing in a trice, was not visible to any living soul until he appeared next day on Towerhill.

The humane part of the mob, who bestirred themfelves for relief of the supposed lady, no sooner perceived their mistake in the appearance of the beau, who stared around him with horror and affright, than their compassion was changed into mirth, and they began to pass a great many unsavoury jokes upon his misfortune. which they now discovered no inclination to alleviate; and he found himself very uncomfortably befet, when Pickle, pitying his fituation, interpoled in his behalf, and prevailed upon the chairmen to carry him into the house of an apothecary in the neighbourhood, to whom his mischance proved a very advantageous accident; for the fright operated so violently upon his nerves, that he was feized with a delirium, and lay a whole fortnight deprived of his fenses; during which period, he was not neglected in point of medicines, food, and attendance, but royally regaled, as appeared by the contents of his landlord's bill.

Our adventurer, having feen this unfortunate beau fafely housed, returned to the scene of the other calamity, which, as it was no other than a foul chimney soon yielded to the endeavours of the family, and was happily overcome, without any other bad consequence, than that of alarming the neighbours, disturbing the college, and disordering the brain of a beau.

Eager to be acquainted with the particular constitutions of a society which seemed to open upon him by degrees, Mr Pickle did not fail to appear at the next meeting, when several petitions were laid before the board, in behalf of those members who were confined in the prisons of the Fleet, Marshalsea, and King's Bench. As those unhappy authors expected nothing from their brethren but advice and good offices, which did not concern the purfe, the momorials were confidered with great care and humanity; and, upon this occasion, Peregrine had it in his power to manifest his importance to the community; for he happened to be acquainted with the creditor of one of the prisoners, and knew that gentleman's severity was owing to his refentment at the behaviour of the debtor, who had lampooned him in print, because he refused to comply with a fresh demand, after he had lent him money to the amount of a confiderable fum. Our young gentleman, therefore, understanding that the author was penitent, and disposed to make a reasonable submission, promised to employ his influence with the creditor towards an accommodation, and in a few days actually obtained his release.

Voc. IV. I from

These social duties being discharged, the conversation took a general turn, and several new productions were freely criticised; those especially which belonged to authors who were either unconnected with, or unknown to the college. Nor did the profession of stageplaying escape the cognizance of the assembly: a deputation of the most judicious members being sent weekly to each theatre, with a view of making remarks upon the performance of the actors. The censors for the preceding week were accordingly called upon to give in their report: and the play which they had reviewed was the Revenge.

Mr Q— (said the second censor) take him all in all, is certainly the most compleat and unblemished performer that ever appeared on our stage, notwithstanding the blind adoration which is paid to his rival. I went two nights ago with an express design to criticise his action: I could find no room for censure, but infinite subject for admiration and applause. In Pierre he is great, in Othello excellent, but in Zanga beyond all imitation. Over and above the distinctness of pronunciation, the dignity of attitude and expression of face, his gestures are so just and significant, that a man, tho' utterly bereft of the fense of hearing, might, by seeing him only, understand the meaning of every word he speaks! Sure nothing can be more exquisite than his manner of telling Isabella how Alonzo behaved when he found the incendiary letter which he had dropt by the Moor's direction; and when, to crown his vengeance, he discovers himself to be the contriver of all the mischief that had happened, he manifetts a perfect masterpiece of action, in pronouncing thefe four little monofyllables, Know then, 'twas ___ I.

Peregrine having eyed the critic some minutes, " I fancy (faid he) your praise must be ironical, because, in the very two fituations you mention, I think I have feen that player out-herod Herod, or, in other words, exceed all his other extravagancies. The intention of the author is, that the Moor should communicate to his confidante a piece of information contained in a few lines, which doubtless ought to be repeated with an air of eagerness and satisfaction, not with the ridiculous grimace of a monkey, to which methought his action . bore an intimate resemblance, in uttering this plain fen-

tence,

1

,

1

n

5

d

.

-

y

e

d

t

S

9

-be took it up; But scarce was it unfolded to bis hight, When he, as if an arrow pierc'd his eye, Started, and trembling dropt it on the ground.

In pronouncing the two first words, this egregious actor stoops down, and seems to take up something from the stage; then proceeding to repeat what follows, mimicks

the manner of unfolding the letter; when he mentions the simile of an arrow piercing the eye, he darts his foresinger towards that organ, then recoils with great violence when the word flarted is expressed; and when he comes to trembling dropt it on the ground, he throws all his limbs into a tremulous motion, and shakes the imaginary paper from his hand. The latter part of the description is carried on with the same minute gesticulation, while he says,

Pale and aghast a while my vitim stood, Disguis'd a sigh or two, and puff'd them from him; Then rubb'd his brow, and took it up again.

The player's countenance assumes a wild stare, he sighs twice most piteously, as if he were on the point of suffication, scrubs his forehead, and, bending his body, apes the action of snatching an object from the sloor. Nor is this desterity of dumb-shew omitted, when he concludes his intimation in these three lines:

At first, he look'd as if he meant to read it; But, check'd by rising fears, he crush'd it thus, And thrust it like an adder in his bosom.

Here the judicious performer intimates the confusion and concern of Alonzo, seems to cast his eyes upon something from which they are immediately withdrawn with horror and precipitation; then shutting his sist with a violent squeeze, as if he intended to make immediate application to Isabella's nose, he rams it in his own bosom, with all the horror and agitation of a thief taken in the manner. Were the player debarred the use of speech, and obliged to act to the eyes only of the audience, this mimickry might be a necessary convey-

ns

nis

at

nd

he

es

of f.

f.

r.

C

ance of his meaning; but when he is at liberty to fignify his ideas by language, nothing can be more trivial, forced, unnatural, and antic, than this superfluous mummery. Not that I would exclude from the representation the graces of action, without which the choicest fentiments, clothed in the most exquisite expression. would appear unanimated and infipid; but thefe are as different from this ridiculous burlesque, as is the demeanour of a Tully in the rostrum, from the tricks of a jack-pudding on a mountebank's stage: and for the truth of what I alledge, I appeal to the observation of any person who has considered the elegance of attitude, and propriety of gefture, as they are universally acknowledged in the real characters of life. Indeed I have known a Galcon, whose limbs were as eloquent as his tongue: he never mentioned the word fleep, without reclining his head upon his hand: when he had occafion to talk of an horse, he always started up and trotted across the room, except when he was so situated that he could not flir wit at incommoding the company, and in that case he contented himself with neighing aloud. If a dog happened to be the subject of his conversation, he wagged his tail, and grinned in a most fignificant manner; and one day he expressed his desire of going backwards with fuch natural imitation of his purpole, that every body in the room firmly believed he had actually overshot himself, and fortified their nostrils accordingly. Yet no man ever looked upon this virtuolo to be the flandard of propriety in point of speaking and deportment. For my own part, I confess the player in question would, by dint of these qualifications, make a very good figure in the character of Pantaloon's lackey, in the entertainment of Perseus and Andromeda, and, perhaps, might acquire some reputation, by turning the Revenge into a pantomime; in 13 which case, I would advise him to come upon the stage, provided with an handful of flour, in order to be-Imear his face, when he pronounces pale and aghast, &c. and, methinks, he ought to illustrate the adder with an hideous hiss. But let us now come to the other situation, in which this modern Æfopus is supposed to diftinguish himself so much, I mean, that same eclaircissement comprehended in Know then, 'twas-I. His manner, I own, may be altered fince I was present at the representation of that performance; but certain I am, when I beheld him in that critical conjuncture, his behaviour appeared to me fo uncouth, that I really imagined he was visited by some epileptic distemper; for he flood tottering and gasping for the space of two minutes, like a man fuddenly ftruck with the palfy; and, after various diffortions and fide-shakings, as if he had got fleas in his doublet, heaved up from his lungs the letter I, like a huge anchor from foul ground."

⒀

This criticilm was acceptable to the majority of the college, who had no great veneration for the player in question; and his admirer, without making any reply asked in a whisper of the gentleman who sat next to him, if Pickle had not offered some production to the flage, and met with a repulse.

CHAP.

CHAP. XCV.

The young gentleman is introduced to a virtuoso of the first order, and sommences Yelper.

HITHERTO Peregrine had professed himself an author, without reaping the fruits of that occupation, except the little fame he had acquired by his late fatire; but now he thought it high time to weigh folid pudding against empty praise; and therefore engaged with some booksellers in a certain translation, which he obliged himself to perform for the consideration of two hundred pounds. The articles of agreement being drawn, he began his talk with great eagerness, rose early in the morning to his work, at which he laboured all day long, went abroad with the bats in the evening, and appeared in the coffee-house, where he amused himself with the news-papers and conversation till nine o'clock; then he retired to his own apartment, and, after a flight repast, betook himself to rest, that he might be able to unrooft with the cock. This fudden change from his. former way of life agreed fo ill with his disposition. that, for the first time, he was troubled with flatulencies and indigestion, which produced anxiety and dejection of spirits, and the nature of his fituation began in some measure to discompose his brain; a discovery which he no fooner made, than he had recourse to the advice of a young physician, who was a member of the college of authors, at this time one of our hero's most intimate acquaintance.

This fon of Æsculapius having considered his case, imputed his disorder to the right cause, namely, want

₿

of exercise; dissuaded him from such close application to study, until he should be gradually familiarized to a sedentary life; advised him to enjoy his friend and his bottle in moderation, and wean himself from his former customs by degrees; and, above all things, to rise immediately after his sirst sleep, and exercise himself in a morning walk. In order to render this last part of the prescription the more palatable, the doctor promised to attend him in these early excursions, and even to introduce him to a certain personage of note, who gave a fort of public breakfassing to the minor virtuosi of the age, and often employed his interest in behalf of those who properly cultivated his countenance and approbation.

This proposal was extremely acceptable to our young gentleman, who, besides the advantage which might acceue to him from such a valuable connection, foresaw much entertainment and satisfaction in the discourse of so many learned guests. The occasions of his health and interest, moreover, coincided in another circumstance; the minister's levee being kept betimes in the morning; so that he could perform his walk, yield his attendance, and breakfast at this philosophical board, without encroaching a great deal upon his avocations.

Measures being thus preconcerted, the physician conducted our adventurer to the house of this celebrated sage, to whom he recommended him as a gentleman of genius and taste, who craved the honour of his acquaintance; but he had previously smoothed the way to this introduction, by representing Peregrine as a young sellow of great ambition, spirit, and address, who could not fail to make a figure in the world; therefore, he would be a creditable addition to the subordinates of such a patron, and, by his qualifications, intrepidity, and warmth of temper, turn out a consummate herald of his fame. Upon these considerations, he met with a most engaging reception from the entertainer, who was a well-bred man, of some learning, generosity, and taste; but his soible was the desire of being thought the inimitable pattern of all the three.

a

S

r

e

d

3

e

e

V

f

.

e

S .

n

.

n

g

e

f

£ :

It was with a view to acquire and support this character, that his house was open to all those who had any pretension to literature; consequently he was furrounded by a strange variety of pretenders; but none were discouraged, because he knew that even the most infignificant might in some shape conduce to the propagation of his praise. A babbler, though he cannot run upon the fcent, may spring the game, and by his yelping help to fill up the cry: no wonder then, that a youth of Pickle's accomplishments was admitted and even invited into the park. After having enjoyed a very fhort private audience in the closet, our young gentleman was shown into another room, where half a dozen of his fellow-adherents waited for their Mæcenas, who, in a few minutes, appeared with a most gracious aspect, received the compliments of the morning, and fat down to breakfast in the midst of them, without any further ceremony.

The conversation at first turned upon the weather, which was investigated in a very philosophical manner by one of the company, who seemed to have consulted all the barometers, and thermometers that ever were invented, before he would venture to affirm that it was a chill morning. This subject being accurately discussed, the chief inquired about the news of the learned world; and his inclination was no sooner expressed than every guest opened his mouth, in order to gratify his curiosity: but he that first captivated his attention was a meagre, shrivelled antiquary, who looked like an animated mummy, which had been scorched among the sands of the defart. He told the patron, that he had by accident met with a medal, which, though it was defaced by time, he would venture to pronounce a genuine antique, from the ringing and taste of the metal, as well as from the colour and composition of the ruft: fo faying, he produced a piece of copper coin, so confumed and disguised by age, that scarce a veftige of the impression was to be perceived. Nevertheless, this connoisseur pretended to diffinguish a face in profile, from which he concluded that the piece was of the upper empire; and on the reverse he endeavoured to point out the bulb of the spear, and part of the parazonium, which were the infignia of the Roman Virtus, together with the fragment of one fold of the multicium in which the was clothed. He like. wife had discovered an angle of the letter N, and, at some distance, an entire I; from these circumstances conjecturing, and indeed concluding, that the medal was Aruck by Severus, in honour of the victory he obtained over his rival Niger, after he had forced the paffes of mount Taurus. This criticism seemed very satisfactory to the entertainer, who having examined the coin by the help of his spectacles, plainly discerned the particulars which the owner had mentioned, and was pleafed to term his account of the matter a very ingenious explanation.

B

This curiofity was circulated through the hands of all prefent, and every virtuoso, in his turn, licked the copper, and rung it upon the hearth, declaring his affent to the judgment which had been pronounced. At length, it fell under the inspection of our young gentleman, who, though no antiquarian, was very well acquainted with the current coin of his own country, and no sooner cast his eyes upon the valuable antique, than he affirmed, without hesitation, that it was no other than the ruins of an English farthing, and that same spear, parazonium and multicium, the remains of the emblems and drapery with which the figure of Britannia is delineated on our copper money.

This hardy affeveration seemed to disconcert the patron, while it incensed the medalist, who, grinning like an enraged baboon, "What d'ye tell me of a brass farthing? (said he): Did you ever know modern brass of such a relish? Do but taste it, young gentleman; and sure I am, if ou have ever been conversant with subjects of this kind, you will find as wide a difference in the savour between this and an English farthing, as can possibly be perceived betwixt an onion and a turnip: besides, this medal has the true Corinthian ring; then the attitude is upright, whereas that of Britannia is reclining: and how is it possible to mistake a branch of palm for a parazonium?"

All the rest of the company espoused the virtuoso's side of the question, because the reputation of each was concerned. The patron sinding himself in the same circumstance, assumed a solemnity of feature, dashed with a small mixture of displeasure, and told Peregrine, that as he had not made that branch of literature his particular study, he was not surprised to see him mistaken in his opinion. Pickle immediately understood the reproof. Though he was shocked at the vanity or insatuation of his entertainer and fellow-guests; asked pardon for his presumption, which was accordingly excused, in consideration of his inexperience; and the English farthing dignified with the title of a true antique.

The next person that addressed himself to the chief, was a gentleman of a very mathematical turn, who valued himself upon the improvements he had made in several domestic machines, and now presented the plan of a new contrivance for cutting cabbages in such a manner as would secure the stock against the rotting rain, and enable it to produce a plenteous after crop of delicious sprouts. In this important machine he had united the whole mechanic powers, with such massy complication of iron and wood, that it could not have been moved without the assistance of an horse, and a road made for the convenience of the draught. These objections were so obvious, that they occurred at first sight to the inspector-general, who greatly commended the invention, which, he observed, might be applied to several other useful purposes, could it once be rendered a little more portable and commodious.

R

The inventor, who had not foreseen these difficulties. was not prepared to furmount them; but he took the hint in good part, and promifed to talk his abilities anew, in altering the conflitution of his defign. Not but that he underwent some severe irony from the rest of the virtuofi, who complimented him upon the momentuous improvement he had made, by which a family might fave a dish of greens in a quarter, for so triffing an expence as that of purchasing, working, and maintaining fuch a stupendous machine: but no man was ever more farcastic in his remarks upon this piece of mechanism than the naturalist, who next appealed to the patron's approbation for a curious disquisition he had made touching the procreation of muck-flies, in which he had laid down a curious method of collecting, preserving, and hatching the eggs of these infects, even in the winter, by certain modifications of artificial heat. The nature of this discovery was no sooner communicated, than Peregrine, unable to contain himself, was feized with a fit of laughter, which infected every perfon at the table, the landlord himself not excepted, who who found it impossible to preserve his wonted gravity of face.

Here

of

d

n-

en

be

b.

ht

he

eed

es,

he

2-lat est

noni-

ifl-

ind

nan

ece

to

he

in

ng,

ven

eat.

was

er.

ted,

who

VOL. IV.

Such unmannerly mirth did not fail to mortify the philosopher, who, after some pause, during which indignation and disdain were painted in his countenance, reprehended our young gentleman for his unphilosophical behaviour, and undertook to prove, that the fubject of his inquiry was of infinite confequence to the progress and increase of natural knowledge : but he found no quarter from the vengeful engineer, who now retorted his ironical compliments, with great emphasis, upon this hot-bed for the generation of vermin, and advised him to lay the whole process before the Royal Society, which would, doubtless, prefent him with a medal, and give him a place among their members, as a distinguished promoter of the uleful arts. " If (faid he) you had employed your studies in finding out some effectual method to destroy those insects, which prejudise and annoy mankind, in all probability you must have been contented with the contemplation of the good you had done; but this curious expedient for multiplying maggots, will furely entitle you to an honourable rank in the lift of learned philosophers." "I don't wonder (replied the naturalist) that you should be so much averse to the propogation of infects, because, in all likelihood, you are afraid that they will not leave you a cabbage to cut down with the fame miraculous machine." "Sir, (answered the mechanic, with great bitternels of voice and aspect) if the cabbage be as light headed as some muck worm philosophers, it will not be worth cutting down." " I never dispute upon cabbage with the fon of a cucumber," faid the fly-breeder, alluding to the pedigree of his antagonist; who, impatient of the affront, ftarted up with fury in his looks, exclaiming, "'Sdeath! meaning me, Sir?"

K

Here the patron, perceiving things drawing towards a rupture, interposed his authority, rebuking them for their intemperance, and recommending to them amity and concord against the Goths and Vandals of the age, who took all opportunities of ridiculing and discouraging the adherents of knowledge and philosophy. After this exhortation, they had no pretence for carrying on the difpute, which was dropt in all appearance, though the mechanic still retained his refentment; and. after breakfast, when the company broke up, accosted his adverfary in the fireet, defiring to know how he durst be so insolent as to make that scurrilous restection upon his family. The fly-fancier, thus questioned, accused the mathematician of having been the aggressor, in likening his head to a light cabbage; and here the altercation being renewed, the engineer proceeded to the illustration of his mechanics, tilting up his hand like a balance, thrufting it forward by way of lever, embracing the naturalist's nose, like a wedge betwixt two of his fingers, and turning it round with the momentum of a screw or peritrochium. Had they been obliged to decide the dispute with equal arms, the affailant would have had great advantage over the other, who was very much his inferior in mulcular strength; but the philosopher being luckily provided with a cane, no fooner difengaged himfelf from this opprobrious application, than he handled his weapon with great dexterity about the head and the shoulders of his antagonist, who, finding this shower of blows very disagreeable, was fain to betake himfelf to his heels for shelter, and was purfued by the angry victor, who chafed him from one end of the street to the other affording unspeakable satisfaction to the multitude, as well as to our hero and to his introductor, who were spectators of the whole fcene.

Thus

Thus was our adventurer initiated in the fociety of Yelpers, though he did not as yet fully understand the nature of his office, which was explained by the young physician, who chid him for his blunt behaviour in the case of the medal, and gave him to understand, that their patron's favour was neither to be gained nor preferved by any man that would pretend to convict him of a miltake : he therefore counselled him to respect this foible, and cultivate the old gentleman with all the zeal and veneration which a regard to his own character would permit him to pay. This task was the easier to one of our young gentleman's pliant disposition, because the virtuofo's behaviour was absolutely free from that infolent felf-conceit, which he could not bear without difguit: the fenior was, on the contrary, mild and beneficent; and Pickle was rather pleased than shocked at his weakness, because it flattered his vanity with the supposition of his own superior sense.

Cautioned in this manuer, Peregrine profited so much by his infinuating qualifications, that in a very little time he was looked upon as one of the chief favourites of the patron, to whom he dedicated a small occasional poem; and every body believed he would reap the fruits of his attachment among the first of the old gentleman's dependants.

9

,

S

CHAP. XCVI.

Peregrine finding himself neglected by Sir Steady Steerwell, expossulates with him in a letter; in consequence of which he is forbid his house, loses his pension, and incurs the charge of lunacy.

THIS prospect of success, together with his expectations from the minister, whom he did not neglect, helped to comfort him under the reverse of fortune which he had undergone, and the uncertainty of the law-fuit which he had fill maintained for the recovery of his ten thousand pounds. The lawyers, indeed, continued to drain his pocket of money, while they filled his brain with an unsubfrantial hope; and he was actually obliged to borrow money from his bookfeller, on the firength of the translation, in order to fatisfy the demands of those ravenous harpies, rather than lay the misanthrope under any difficulties, or have recourse to his friend Hatchway, who lived at the garrifon entirely ignorant of his diffress. This was not at all alleviated by the arrival of the India-man in which he had ventured seven hundred pounds, as we have already observed; for he was given to understand, that the borrower was left dangerously ill at Bombay when the thip failed, and that his chance for retrieving his money was extremely flender.

So fituated, it is not to be supposed that he led a life of tranquillity, though he made a shift to struggle with the remonstrances of misfortune; yet such a gush of assistant would sometimes rush upon his thought, as overwhelmed all the ideas of his hope, and sunk him to the very bottom of despondence. Every equipage that passed him in the street, every person of rank and fortune that occurred to his view, recalled the gay images of his former life, with fuch mortifying reflection, as flabbed him to the very foul. He lived, therefore, inceffantly exposed to all the pangs of envy and disquiet-When I fay envy, I do not mean that fordid paffion, in consequence of which a man repines at his neighbour's fuccess, howsoever deferved; but that felf-tormenting indignation which is inspired by the prosperity of folly, ignorance, and vice. Without the intervening gleams of enjoyment, which he felt in the conversation of a few friends, he could not have supported his existence; or at least he must have suffered some violent discomposure of the brain : but one is still find. ing fome circumflance of alleviation, even in the worft of conjunctures; and Pickle was fo ingenious in thefe refearches, that he maintained a good battle with difappointment, till the revolution of the term at which he had received his pension of three hundred pounds.

However, feeing the day elapse, without touching his allowance, notwithstanding his fignificant method of presenting himself at the minister's levee; when the year was expired, he wrote a letter to Sir Steady, reminding him of his situation and promise, and giving him to understand, that his occasions were such, as compelled him to demand his salary for the ensuing year.

e

.

at

10

10

10

ey

fe

th

f.

1.

he

f.

ne

jat

In the morning after this letter was conveyed, the author went to his honour's house, in expectation of being admitted by particular order; but was mistaken in his hope, the minister not being visible. He then made his appearance at the levee, in hopes of being closeted; but though he took all opportunities of watching Sir Steady's eyes, he could not obtain one glance, and had the pleasure of seeing him retire, without being favoured with the least notice. These circumstances of wilful neglect were not over and above agreeable to our young hero, who, in the agonies of vexation and refentment, went home, and composed a most acrimonious remonstrance to his Honour, in conse quence of which, he was not only deprived of all pretensions to a private audience, but expressly denied admittance on a public day, by Sir Steady's own order.

This prohibition, which announced his total ruin, filled him with rage, horror, and despair; he insulted the porter who signified the minister's command, threatening to chastife him upon the spot for his presumption, and vented the most virulent imprecations upon his master, to the astonishment of those who chanced to enter during this conference. Having exhausted himself in these vain exclamations, he returned to his lodgings in a most frantic condition, biting his lips, so that the blood ran from his mouth, dashing his head and fists against the sides of his chimney, and weeping with the most bitter expressions of wo.

Pipes, whose perception had been just sufficient to let him fee that there was some difference between the present and former situation of his master, overhearing his transports, essayed to enter his apartment, with a view of administering confolation; and finding the door locked on the infide, defired admittance, protesting that otherwise he would down with the bulk-head in the turning of an hand-spike. Peregrine ordered him to retire on pain of his displeasure, and swore, that if he should offer to break open the door, he would instantly shoot him through the head. Tom, without paying the least regard to this injunction, set himself at work immediately. His master, exasperated at his want of reverence and respect, which in his present paroxylm appeared with the most provoking aggravation, flew into his closet, and fnatching up one of his pistols already loaded, no fooner faw his valet enter the apartment, in consequence of having forced the lock,

than

Æ

n,

d

t-

n,

is

1)- 15

28

16

2.

to ne

13

he

A-

ad

ed

at

n.

ut

at 115 nt

12.

nis

he

k,

an

than he presented full at his face, and drew the trigger. Happily the priming flashed in the pan, without communicating with the charge; so that his furious purpose did not take effect upon the countenance of honest Pipes, who, disregardful of the attempt, though he knew the contents of the piece, asked, without the least alteration of feature, if it must be foul weather through the whole voyage?

Peregrine, mad as he was, repented of his mischieyous intent against such a faithful adherent, in the very moment of execution; and, had it proved fatal, according to the defign, in all probability he would have applied another to his own head. There are certain confiderations that firike upon the mind with irrefiftible force, even in the midst of its distraction: the momentary recollection of some particular scene, occasioned by the features of the devoted victim, bath often ftruck the daggar from the affaffin's hand. By fuch an impulle was Pipes protected from any repeated effort of his mafter's rage: the friendly cause of his present difobedience flathed upon the conviction of Peregrine, when he beheld the rugged front of his valet, in which also stood disclosed his long and faithful service, together with the recommendation of the deceased Comdore.

Though his wrath was immediately suppressed, and his heart torn with remorse for what he had done, his brows remained still contracted; and, darting a most ferocious regard at the intruder, "Villain! (said he) how dare you treat me with such disrespect?" "Why shouldn't I lend a hand for the preservation of the ship, (answered the unrussed Pipes) when there is more fail than ballast aboard, and the pilot quits the helm in despair? What signifies one or two broken voyages, so long as our timbers are strong, and our vessel in good trim?

trim? If she loses upon one tack, mayhap she may gain upon t'other; and I'll be damn'd if one day or other we don't fetch up our lee-way: as for the matter of provision, you have stowed a pretty good stock of mo, ney into my hold, and you are welcome to hoist it up a gain when you wool."

Here Tom was interrupted by the arrival of Mr Crabtree, who, seeing Peregrine with a pistol in his hand, and such wild disorder in his looks, his head, hands, and mouth besmeared with blood; and, moreover, smelling the gun-powder which had been burnt actually believed he had either committed, or was bent upon murder, and accordingly retreated down stairs with infinite dispatch. All his speed could not convey him without the reach of Pipes, who, overtaking him in his passage, carried him back into his master's apartment, observing by the way, that this was no time to sheer off, when his consort stood in need of his assistance.

There was fomething so ruefully severe in the countenance of Cadwallader, thus compelled, that at any other time our hero would have laughed at his concern, but, at present, there was nothing risble in his disposition: he had, however, laid aside his pistol, and endeavoured, though in vain, to compose his internal disturbance; for he could not utter one syllable to the misanthrope, but stood staring at him in silence, with a most delirious aspect. This did not tend to dispel the dismay of his friend, who, after some recollection, "I wonder (said he) that you have never killed your man before. Pray how may you have disposed of the body?" Pickle, having recovered the faculty of speech, ordered his lackey out of the room, and, in a most incoherent

12

).

a.

Ir

13

1,

12

1.

e

1,

.

(.

2

e

I

n

1

4

1

coherent detail, made Crabtree acquainted with the perfidious conduct of the minister.

The confident was very glad to find his fears difappointed, for he had really concluded that fome life was loft. Perceiving the youth too much agitated to be treated by him in his usual style, he owned that Sir Steady was a rascal, encouraged Pickle with the hope of being one day able to make reprifals upon him: in the mean time, offered money for his immediate occasions, exharted him to exert his own qualifications in rendering himself independent of such miscreants; and finally counselled him to represent his wrongs to the noble. man whom he had formerly obliged, with a view of interefling that peer in his behalf, or at least of obtaining a facisfactory explanation from the minister, that he might take no premature measures of revenge.

These admonitions were so much milder and more agreeable than our hero expeded from the milanthrope. that they had a very favourable effect upon his transports, which gradually subfided, until he became for tractable as to promife that he would conform to his advice; in confequence of which, he next morning waited upon his Lordthip, who received him very politely, as usual, and with great patience heard his complaint, which, by the bye, he could not repeat without fome hally ebulitions of passionate resentment. This peer, after having gently disapproved of the letter of expostulation, which had produced fuch unfortunate effects, kindly undertook to recommend his case to the minister, and actually performed his promise that same day, when Sir Steady informed him, to his utter aftonishment, that the poor young gentleman was disordered in his brain, so that he could not possibly be provided for in a place of importance, with any regard to the fervice; and it could not be expected that he (Sir Steady) would support his extravagance from his own private purse: that he had indeed, at the folicitation of a nobleman deceased, made him a present of three hundred pounds, in confideration of some loss that he pretended to have fuffained in an election; but, fince that time, had perceived in him fuch indisputable marks of lunacy, both by his diffracted letters and personal behaviour, as obliged him to give order that he should not be admitted into the house. To corroborate this offertion, the minister actually called in the evidence of his own porter, and one of the gentlemen of his household, who had heard the execrations that escaped our youth when he first found himself excluded. In short, the nobleman was convinced that Peregrine was certainly and bona fide mad as a March hare; and, by the help of this intimation, began to recollect fome fymptoms of distraction which appeared in his last visit: he remembered a certain incoherence in his speech, a violence of gesture and wildness of look, that now evidently denoted a disturbed understanding; and he determined, for his own credit and fecurity, to difentangle himself from such a dangerous acquaintance.

With this view, he, in imitation of Sir Steady, commanded his gate to be shut against our adventurer; so that when he went to know the result of his lordship's conference with the minister, the door was slung in his face, and the janitor told him through an iron grate, that he needed not to give himself the trouble of calling again, for his lord defired to be excused from seeing him. He spoke not a word in answer to this declaration, which he immediately imputed to the ill offices of the minister, against whom he breathed defiance and revenge, in his way to the lodgings of Cadwallader; who being made acquainted with the manner of his reception, begged he would defist from all schemes of vengeance, until he

(Crabtree)

(Crabtree) should be able to unriddle the mystery of the whole, which he did not doubt of unveiling, by means of his acquaintance with a family in which his lordship often spent the evening at whist.

.

1-

24

at

of

e-

d

[-

of

eur

t,

r.

10

p.

10

0-

t-

r-

le

11.

10

's

115

at

a.

m.

ch

er,

115

le

d

e

)

It was not long before he had the defired opportunity: the nobleman being under no injunctions of obligation to keep the affair fecret, discovered the young gentleman's misfortune, by way of news, to the first company in which he happened to be; and Peregrine's name was not so obscure in the fashionable world, but that his disorder became the general topic of conversation for a day; so that his friend soon partook of the intelligence, and found means to learn the particulars of the minister's information, as above related. Nay, he was in danger of becoming a proselyte to Sir Steady's opinion, when he recalled and compared every circumstance which he knew of Pickle's impatience and impetuosity.

Indeed, nothing more easily gains credit than an imputation of madnels fixed upon any person whatsoever; for when the suspicion of the world is roused, and its observation once set at work, the wifest, the coolest man upon earth, will, by some particulars in his behaviour, convict himself of the charge; every fingularity in his dress and manuer (and such are observable in every perion) that before passed unheeded, now rifes up in judgement against him, with all the exaggeration of the obherver's fancy; and the fagacious examiner perceives distraction in every glance of the eye, turn of the finger, and motion of the head: when he speaks, there is firange peculiarity in his argument and expression; when he holds his tongue, his imagination teems with ome extravagant reverie; his sobriety of demeaner is no other than a lucid interval, and his passion mere delirium,

If people of the most sedate and insipid life and conversation are subject to such criticisms, no wonder that they should take place upon a youth of Peregrine's siery disposition, which, on some occasions, would have actually justified any remarks of this kind which his greatest enemies could make. He was accordingly represented as one of those enterprising bucks, who, after having spent their fortunes in riot and excess, are happily bereft of their understanding, and consequently infensible of the want and disgrace which they have entailed upon themselves.

Cadwallader himfelf was fo much affected with the report, that for some time he hefitated in his deliberations upon our hero, before he could prevail upon himfelf to communicate to him the information he had received, or to treat him in other respects as a man of found intellects. At length, however, he ventured to make Pickle acquainted with the particulars he had learned, imparting them with fuch caution and circumlocution, as he thought necessary to prevent the young gentleman from transgrelling all bounds of temper and moderation; but, for once, he was agreeably deceived in his prognostic. Incenfed as our hero was at the conduct of the minister, he could not help laughing at the ridiculous afperfion, which he told his friend he would foon refute, in a manner that should not be very agreeable to his calumniator; observing, that it was a common practice with the state pilot thus to flander those people to whom he lay under obligations which he had no mind to discharge. "True it is (faid Peregrine) he has succeeded more than once in contrivances of this kind, having actually reduced divers people of weak heads to fuch extremity of despair, as hath issued in downright distraction, whereby he was rid of their inportunities, and his judgment confirmed at the fame time:

n-

ie.

his

reap.

in.

en-

the era-

im.

re-

n of

d to had

:um-

oung

and

ived

cont the

rould

greecom-

thole

e had rine)

f this

weak

ed in

im.

fame

ime:

time: but I have now (thank heaven) attained to fuch a pitch of philosophical resolution, as will support me against all his machinations; and I will forthwith exhibit the monster to the public, in his true lineaments of crast, persidy, and ingratitude."

This indeed was the plan with which Mr Pickle had amused himself during the researches of Crabtree; and by this time it so effectually flattered his imagination, that he believed he should be able to bring his adversary (in spite of all his power) to his own terms of submission, by distinguishing himself in the list of those who, at that period wrote against the administration. Nor was this scheme so extravagant as it may seem to be, had not he overlooked one material circumstance, which Cadwallader himself did not recollect when he approved of this project.

While he thus meditated vengeance, the fame of his disorder, in due course of circulation, reached the ears of that lady of quality whose memoirs have appeared in the third volume of these adventures. The correspondence with which she had honoured our hero had been long broke off, for the reason already advanced, namely, his dread of being exposed to her infatuating charms. He had been candid enough to make her acquainted with this cause of exiling himself from her presence; and the admitted the prudence of felf-restraint, although . she would have been very well fatisfied with the continuance of his intimacy and conversation, which were not at all beneath the defire of any lady in the kingdom. Notwithstanding this interruption, she still retained a friendship and regard for his character, and felt all the affliction of a humane heart at the news of his misfortunes and deplorable distemper. She had seen him courted and cultivated in the fun shine of his prosperity; but she knew, from sad experience, how all those VOL. IV. L insectinsect-followers shrink away in the winter of distress. Her compassion represented him as a poor unhappy lunatic, destitute of all the necessaries of life, dragging about the ruins of human nature, and exhibiting the spectacle of blasted youth, to the scorn and abhorrence of his fellow-creatures. Aching with these charitable considerations, she found means to learn in what part of the town he lodged; and, laying aside all supersuous ceremony, went in a hackney-chair to his door, which was opened by the ever-faithful Pipes.

Her ladyship immediately recollected the features of this trusty follower, whom she could not help loving in her heart for his attachment and sidelity, which, after she had applauded with a most gracious commendation, she kindly inquired after the state of his master's health, and asked if he was in a condition to be seen.

Tom, who could not suppose that the visit of a fine lady would be unacceptable to a youth of Peregrive's complexion, made no verbal reply to the question; but beckoning her ladyship with an arch significance of feature, at which the could not forbear finiling, walked foftly up stairs; and she, in obedience to the signal, followed her guide into the apartment of our hero, whom the found at a writing-table, in the very act of composing an eulogium upon his good friend Sir Steadv. The nature of his work bad animated his countenance with an uncommon degree of vivacity; and being dreffed in a neat diffiabille, his figure could not have appeared to more advantage, in the eye of a perion who despited the tinfel of unnecessary ornament. She was extremely well pleafed to fee her expectations fo agreeably disappointed; for, instead of the squalid circumflances and wretched looks attending indigence and diftraction, every thing was decent and genteel, and the patient's alpect such as betokened internal tatisfaction. Hearing

Hearing the rulling of filk in his room, he lifted up his eyes from the paper, and feeing her ladythip, was firnck with affonishment and awe, as at the unexpected apparition of some supernatural being.

Before he could recollect himself from his consusion, which called the blood into his cheeks, she told him, that, on the strength of old acquaintance, she was come to visit him, though it was a long time since he had given her good reason to believe he had absolutely forgot there was such a person as she in being. After having made the most warm acknowledgments for this unforeseen honeur, he assured her ladyship, that the subject of her reproach was not his fault, but rather his very great missortune; and that, if it had been in his power to forget her so easily as she seemed to imagine, he should never have given her cause to tax him with want of duty and respect.

Still dubious of his fituation, she began to converse with him on different subjects; and he acquitted himfelf so well in every particular, that she no longer doubted his having been misrepresented by the matice of his enemies; and candidly told him the cause and intent of her coming. He was not deficient in expressions of gratitude for this instance of her generosity and friendship, which even drew tears from his eyes. As to the imputation of madness, he explained it so much to her ladyship's satisfaction, that she evidently perceived he had been barbarously dealt with, and that the charge was no other than a most villanous aspersion.

Notwithstanding all his endeavours to conceal the true state of his finances, it was impossible for him to give this detail, without disclosing some of the difficulties under which he laboured; and her ladyship's sagacity divining the rest, she not only made him a tender of assistance, but presenting a bank-note for a confiderable fum, infifted upon his acceptance of it, as a trifling mark of her esteem, and a specimen of what she was inclined to do in his behalf. But this mark of her benevolence he would by no means receive; assuring her, that though his affairs were at present a little perplexed, he had never felt the least circumstance of distress, and begged that she would not subject him to the burden of such an unnecessary obligation.

Being obliged to put up with this refusal, she protested she would never forgive him, should she ever hear that he rejected her offer when he stood in need of her aid; or if, in time to come, he should not apply to her friendship if ever he should find himself incommoded in point of fortune: "An over-delicacy in this respect (said she) I shall look upon as a disapprobation of my own conduct; because I myself have been obliged to have recourse to my friends in such emergencies."

These generous remonstrances and marks of particular friendship, could not fail to make a deep impression upon the heart of our hero, which still smarted from the former impulse of her charms: he not only selt all those transports which a man of honour and sensibility may be supposed to seel upon such an occasion; but the sentiments of a more tender passion awaking in his breast, he could not help expressing himself in terms adapted to the emotions of his soul; and at length plainly told her, that, were he disposed to be a beggar, he would ask something of infinitely more importance to his peace than the charitable assistance she had proffered.

Her ladyship had too much penetration to mistake his meaning; but, as she did not choose to encourage his advances, pretended to interpret his intimation into a general compliment of gallantry, and, in a jocose manner, desired he would not give her any reason to believe his lucid interval was past. "In faith, my lady, (said he) I perceive the fit coming on; and I don't fee why I may not use the privilege of my distemper, so far as to declare myself one of your most passionate admirers." " If you do, (replied her ladyship) I shall not be fool enough to believe a madman, unless I were affured that your disorder proceeded from your love; and that this was the case, I suppose you would find it difficult to prove." "Nay, Madam, (cried the youth) I have in this drawer what will convince you of my having been mad on that firain; and fince you doubt my pretenfions, you must give me leave to produce my testimonials." So faying, he opened a ferutoire, and, taking out a paper, presented her with the following fong. which he had written in her praife, immediately after he was made acquainted with the particulars of her ftory:

I.

While with fond rapture and amaze
On thy transcendent charms I gaze,
My cautious soul essays in vain
Her peace and freedom to maintain.
Yet let that blooming form divine,
Where grace and harmony combine;
Those eyes, like genial orbs, that move,
Dispensing gladness, joy, and love;
In all their pomp assail my view,
Intent my bosom to subdue;
My breast, by wary maxims steel'd,
Not all those charms shall force to yield.

II.

But when invok'd to Beauty's aid, I fee th' enlighten'd foul display'd; That foul fo fensibly sedate Amid the storms of froward fate!
Thy genius active, strong, and clear,
Thy wit sublime, tho' not severe,
The social ardour void of art,
That glows within thy candid heart;
My spirits, sense, and strength decay,
My resolution dies away;
And, ev'ry faculty opprest,
Almighty love invades my breast!

Her ladyship having perused this production, " Were I inclined to be suspicious, (faid she) I should believe that I had no share in producing this composition, which feems to have been inspired by a much more amiable object. However, I will take your word for your intention, and thank you for the unmerited compliment, though I have met with it in fuch an accidental manner. Nevertheless, I must be so free as to tell you, it is now high time for you to contract that unbounded fpirit of gallantry, which you have indulged fo long, into a fincere attachment for the fair Emilia, who, by all accounts, deserves the whole of your attention and regard." His nerves thrilled at the mention of that name, which he never heard pronounced without agita-Rather than undergo the consequence of a conversation upon this subject, he chose to drop the theme of love altogether, and industriously introduced some other topic of discourse.

CHAP.

it ad

talents

CHAP. XCVII.

He writes against the minister, by whose instigation he is arrested, and moves himself by Habeas Corpus into the Fleet.

MY lady having prolonged her stay beyond the period of a common visit, and repeated her protestations in the most frank and obliging manner, took her leave of our adventurer, who promised to pay his respects to her in a few days, at her own house. Meanwhile, he resumed his task; and having sinished a most severe remonstrance against Sir Steady, not only with regard to his private ingratitude, but also to his maladministration of public affairs, he sent it to the author of a weekly paper, who had been long a professed resormer of politics; and it appeared in a very sew days, with a note of the publisher, desiring the savour of farther correspondence with the author.

The animadversions contained in this small essay, were so spirited and judicious, and a great many new lights thrown upon the subject with such perspicuity, as attracted the notice of the public in an extraordinary manner, and helped to raise the character of the paper in which it was inserted. The minister was not the last who examined the performance, which, in spite of all his boasted temper, provoked him to such a degree, that he set his emissaries at work, and, by dint of corruption, procured a sight of the manuscript in Peregrine's own hand-writing, which he immediately recognised; but for farther confirmation of his opinion, he compared it with the two letters which he had received from our adventurer. Had he known the young gentleman's talents for declamation were fo acute, perhaps he would never have given him cause to complain, but employed him in the vindication of his own measures: nay, he might fill have treated him like fome other authors whom he had brought over from the opposition, had not the beenness of this first affault incensed him to a defire of revenge. He therefore no fooner made this discovery, than he conveyed his directions to his dependent the receiver general, who was possessed of Pickle's notes. Next day, while our author flood within a circle of his quaintance, at a certain coffee-house, holding forth with great eloquence upon the diseases of the state, he was accosted by a bailiff, who entering the room with five or fix followers, told him aloud, that he had a writ against him for twelve hundred pounds, at the suit of Mr Ravage Gleanum.

The whole company were aftenished at this address which did not fail to discompose the desendant himself, who, (as it were instinctively) in the midst of his confusion, saluted the officer across the head with his cane, in consequence of which application, he was surrounded and disarmed in an instant by the gang, who carried him off to the next tavern in the most opprobrious manner. Nor did one of the spectators interpose in his behalf, or visit him in his confinement with the least tender of advice or assistance: such is the zeal of a cossee-house friendship.

This stroke was the more severe upon our hero, as it was altogether unexpected, for he had utterly forgot the debt for which he was arrested. His present indignation was however chiefly kindled against the bailiss, who had done his office in such a disrespectful manner; and the first use he made of his recollection in the house to which they conducted him, was to chastise him for the insolence and indecency of his behaviour.

This

fre

di

little

This task he performed with his bare sists, every other weapon being previously conveyed out of his reach; and the delinquent underwent his discipline with surprising patience and resignation, asking pardon with great humility, and protesting before God, that he had never willingly and wittingly used any gentleman with ill manners, but had been commanded to arrest our adventurer according to the express direction of the creditor, on pain of forseiting his place.

By this declaration, Peregrine was appealed, and, out of a delirium of passion, waked to all the horrors of reflection. All the glory of his youth was now eclipfed, all the bloffoms of his hope were blafted, and he faw himself doomed to the miseries of a jail, without the least prospect of enlargement, except in the issue of his law-fuit, of which he had, for fome time past, grown less and less confident every day. What would become of the unfortunate, if the constitution of the mind did not permit them to bring one passion into the field against another! Passions that operate in the human breast like poifons of a different nature, extinguishing each others effed. Ourhero's grief reigned in full despotism, until it was deposed by revenge, during the predominancy of which, he confidered every thing which had happened as a circumstance conducive to its gratification: " If I must be prisoner for life, (faid he to hinsfelf) if I must relinquish all my gay expectations, let me at least have the fatisfaction of clanking my chains fo as to interrupt the repose of my adversary; and let me fearch into my own breast for that peace and contentment which I have not been able to find in all the scenes of my succefs. In being detached from the world, I shall be delivered from folly and ingratitude, as well as exemptedfrom an expence, which I fould have found it very difficult, if not impractiable to support : I shall have little or no temptation to mispend my time, and more undisturbed opportunity to earn my subsistence, and prosecute my revenge. After all, a jail is the best tub to which a cynic philosopher can retire."

R

In consequence of these comfortable reslections, he sent a letter to Mr Crabtree, with an account of his missfortune, signifying his resolution to move himself immediately into the Fleet, and desiring that he would send him some understanding attorney of his acquaintance, who could direct him to the steps necessary to be taken for that purpose. The misanthrope, upon the receipt of this intimation, went in person to a lawyer, whom he accompanied to the spunging-house whither the prisoner had by this time retired. Peregrine was, under the auspices of this director, conducted to the judge's chamber, where he was left in the custody of a tipitass, and, after having paid for a warrant of Habeas Corpus, by him conveyed to the Fleet, and delivered to the care of the warden.

Here he was introduced to the lodge, in which he was obliged to expose himself a full half hour to the eyes of all the turnkeys and door keepers, who took an accurate furvey of his person, that they might know him again at first fight; and then he was turned loofe into the place called the Mafter's fide, having given a valuable confideration for that privilege. This is a large range of building, containing some hundreds of lodgingrooms for the convenience of the priloners, who pay fo much per week for that accommodation. In thort, this community is like a city detached from all communication with the neighbouring parts, regulated by its own laws, and furnished with peculiar conveniences for the use of the inhabitants. There is a coffee-house for the refort of gentlemen, in which all forts of liquors are kept, and a public kitchen, where any quantity of meat 15

ne

fo

is fold at a very reasonable rate, or any kind of provifion boiled and roasted gratis, for the poor prisoners; nay there are certain servants of the public, who are obliged to go to market at the pleasure of individuals, without see or reward from those who employ them; nor are they cooped up so as to be excluded from the benefit of fresh air, there being an open area, of a considerable extent, adjacent to the building, on which they may exercise themselves in walking, skittles, bowls and variety of other diversions, according to the inclination of each.

Our adventurer being admitted a denizen of this community, found himself bewildered in the midst of strangers, who, by their appearance, did not at all preposses him in their favour; and, after having strolled about the place with his friend Cadwallader, repaired to the coffee-house, in order to be further informed of the peculiar customs which it was necessary for him to know.

There, while he endeaveured to pick up intelligence from the bar-keeper, he was accosted by a person in canonicals, who very civilly asked if he was a new-comer. Being answered in the affirmative, he gave him the falutation of welcome to the fociety, and with great hospitality undertook to initiate him in the constitutions of the brotherhood. This humane clergyman gave him to understand, that his first care ought to be that of fecuring a lodging; telling him, there was a certain number of apartments in the prison let at the same price, though some were more commodious than others; and that when the better fort became vacant by the removal of their policifors, those who succeeded in point of feniority had the privilege of occupying the empty tenements preferable to the rest of the inhabitant, howsoever respectable they might otherwise be: that when the jail was very much crowded, there was but one chamber allotted for two lodgers; but this was not confidered as any great hardship on the prisoners, because, in that case, there was always a sufficient number of males who willingly admitted the semales to a share of their apartments and beds: not but the time had been, when this expedient would not answer the occasion, because, after a couple had been quartered in every room, there was a considerable residue still unprovided with lodgings; so that, for the time being, the last comers were obliged to take up their habitation in Mount Scoundrel, an apartment most miserably furnished, in which they lay promiscuously amidst filth and vermin, until they could be better accommodated in due course of rotation.

Peregrine hearing the description of this place, began to be very impatient about his night's lodging; and the parson, perceiving his anxiety, conducted him, without loss of time, to the warden, who forthwith put him in possession of a paltry chamber, for which he agreed to pay him half a crown a week. This point being settled, his director gave him an account of the different methods of eating, either singly, in a mess, or at an ordinary; and advised him to choose the last as the most reputable, offering to introduce him next day to the best company in the Fleet, who always direct together in public.

Pickle having thanked this gentleman for his civilities, and promifed to be governed by his advice, invited him to pass the evening at his apartment, and in the mean time shut himself up with Crabtree, in order to deliberate upon the wreck of his affairs. Of all his ample fortune, nothing now remained but his wardrobe, which was not very sumptuous, about thirty guineas in cash, and the garrison, which the misanthrope counsel-

fo

H

lif

led

led him to convert into ready money for his present fubfistence. This advice, however, he absolutely rejected, not only on account of his having already bestowed it upon Hatchway, during the term of his natural life, but also with a view of retaining some memorial of the Commodore's generofity. He proposed, therefore, to finish, in this retreat, the translation which he had undertaken, and earn his future subfistence by labour of the same kind. He defired Cadwallader to take charge of his moveables, and fend to him fuch linen and clothes as he should have occasion for in his confinement. But among all his difficulties, nothing embarraffed him so much as his faithful Pipes, whom he could no longer entertain in his fervice. He knew Tom had made shift to pick up a competency in the course of his ministration; but that reflection, though it in fome measure alleviated, could not wholly prevent the mortification he should suffer in parting with an affectionate adherent, who was by this time become as neceffary to him as one of his own members, and who was fo accustomed to live under his command and protection, that he did not believe the fellow could reconcile himfelf to any other way of life.

Crabtree, in order to make him easy on that score, offered to adopt him in the room of his own valet, whom he would dismis, though he observed, that Pipes had been quite spoiled in our hero's service. But Peregrine did not choose to lay his friend under that inconvenience, knowing that his present lackey understood and complied with all the peculiarities of his humour, which Pipes would never be able to study or regard; he therefore determined to send him back to his shipmate Hatchway, with whom he had spent the fore-part of his life.

ıt

15

d

10

0

15

e,

These points being adjusted, the two friends adjourn-Vol. IV. M ed ed to the coffee-house, with a view of enquiring into the character of the clergyman, to whose beneficence our adventurer was so much indebted. They learned he was a parson who had incurred the displeasure of the bishop in whose diocese he was settled, and, being unequal in power to his antagonist, had been driven to the Fleet, in consequence of his obstinate opposition; tho he still found means to enjoy a pretty considerable income, by certain irregular practices in the way of his function, which income was chiefly consumed in acts of humanity to his fellow creatures in distress.

His eulogium was scarce finished, when he entered the room, according to appointment, with Peregrine, who ordering wine and fomething for supper to be carried to his apartment, the triumvirate went thither, and Cadwallader taking his leave for the night, the two fellow-prisoners baffed the evening very fociably; our hero being entertained by his new companion with the private history of the place, some particulars of which were extremely curious. He told him, that the person who attended them at Supper, bowing with the most abject fervility, and worshipping them every time he opened his mouth, with the epithets of your Lord/hip and your Honour, had a few years before been actually a captain in the guards, who, after having run his career in the great world, had threaded every station in their community, from that of a buck of the first order, who swaggers about the Fleet in a laced coat with a footman and whore, to the degree of a tapster, in which he was now happily fettled. " If you will take the trouble of going into the cook's kitchen, (faid he) you will perceive a beau metamorphofed into a turnspit; and there are fome hewers of wood, and drawers of water in this microcosm, who have had forests and fishponds of their own:

own: yet notwithstanding such a miserable reverse of fortune, they are neither objects of regard nor compasfion, because their misfortunes are the fruits of the most vicious extravagance, and they are absolutely insensible of the mifery which is their lot. Those of our fellowfufferers, who have been reduced by undeferved losses, or the precipitation of unexperienced youth, never fail to meet with the most brotherly assistance, provided they behave with decorum, and a due sense of their unhappy circumstances. Nor are we destitute of power to chastife the licentious who refuse to comply with the regulations of the place, and diffurb the peace of the community with riot and diforder. Justice is here impartially administered by a court of equity, confisting of a felect number of the most respectable inhabitants, who punish all offenders with equal judgment and refolution, after they have been fairly convicted of the crimes laid to their charge.

The clergyman having thus explained the occonomy of the place, as well as the cause of his own confinement, began to discover figns of curiofity touching ou hero's situation; and Pickle, thinking he could do no less for the satisfaction of a man who had treated him. in fuch an hospitable manner, favoured him with a detail of the circumstances which produced his imprison ment; at the same time gratifying his resentment against the minister, which delighted in recapitulating the injuries he had received. The parson, who had been prepossessed in favour of our youth at first fight understanding what a considerable part he had acted on the stage of life, felt his veneration increase; and, pleafed with the opportunity of introducing a stranger of his consequence to the club, left him to his repose, or rather to ruminate on an event which he had not as yet feriously confidered.

I might here, in imitation of some celebrated writers, furnish out a page or two with the reflections he made upon the inflability of human affairs, the treachery of the world, and the temerity of youth; and endeavour to decoy the reader into a smile, by some quaint observations of my own, touching the fagacious moralizer: but, besides that I look upon this practice as an impertinent anticipation of the perufer's thoughts, I have too much matter of importance upon my hands, to give the reader the least reason to believe that I am driven to fuch paltry shifts, in order to eke out the volume. Suffice it then to fay, our adventurer passed a very uneasy night, not only from the thorny suggestions of his mind, but likewise from the anguish of his body. which suffered from the hardness of his couch, as well as from the natural inhabitants thereof, that did not tamely suffer his intrusion.

In the morning he was waked by Pipes, who brought upon his shoulder a portmanteau filled with necessaries, according to the direction of Cadwallader; and toffing it down upon the floor, regaled himself with a quid, without the least manifestation of concern. After some pause, " You fee, Pipes, (said his mafter) to what I have brought myself." "Ey, ey, (answered the valet) once the veffel is afhore, what fignifies talking? We must bear a hand to tow her off, if we can: if she won't budge for all the anchors and capstans aboard, after we have lightened her, by cutting away her masts, and heaving our guns and cargo overboard, why then, mayhap, a brifk gale of wind, a tide, or current fetting from there, may float her again in the blaft of a whiftle. Here is two hundred and ten guineas by the tale, in this here canvas bag! and upon this scrap of paperno, avail-that's my discharge from the parish for Moll Trundle-ey, here it is-an order for thirty pounds upon the what-d'ye-call-'em in the city; and two tickets for twenty-five and eighteen, which I lent, d'ye fee, to Sam Studding, to buy a cargo of rum when he hoisted the fign of the Commodore at St Catharine's." So saying, he spread his whole slock upon the table, for the acceptance of Peregrine; who, being very much affected with this fresh instance of his attachment, expressed his satisfaction at seeing he had been such a good reconomist, and paid his wages up to that very day. He thanked him for his faithful services; and observing that he himself was no longer in a condition to maintain a domestic, advised him to retire to the garrison, where he would be kindly received by his friend Hatchway, to whom he would recommend him in the strongest terms.

Pipes looked blank at this unexpected intimation, to which he replied, that he wanted neither pay nor provision, but only to be employed as a tender; and that he would not steer his course for the garrison, unless his mafter would first take his lumber aboard. Pickle, however, peremptorily refused to touch a farthing of the money, which he commanded him to put up : and Pipes was fo mortified at his refufal, that twifting the notes together, he threw them into the fire without hefitation, crying, " Damn the money !" The canvas bag, with its contents, would have shared the same fate, had not Peregrine flarted up, and, fnatching the paper from the flames, ordered his valet to forbear, on pain of being banithed for ever from his fight. He told him. that, for the present, there was a necessity for his being dismissed, and he discharged him accordingly; but if he would go and live quietly with the Lieutenant, he promised, on the first favourable turn of his fortune, to take him a. gain into his fervice. In the mean time, he gave him to under and, that he neither wanted, nor would make any use of his money; which he infifted upon his pocketing immediately, on pain of forfeiting all title to his favour.

Pipes was very much chagrined at these injunctions, to which he made no reply; but sweeping the money into his bag, stalked off in silence, with a look of grief and mortiscation, which his countenance had never exhibited before. Nor was the proud heart of Pickle unmoved upon this occasion; he could scarce suppress his forrow in the presence of Pipes, and, as soon as he was gone, it vented itself in tears.

Having no great pleasure in conversing with his own thoughts, he dressed himself with all convenient dispatch, being attended by one of the occasional valets of the place, who had been formerly a rich mercer in the city; and this operation being performed, he went to breakfast at the coffee-house, where he happened to meet with his friend the clergyman, and several persons of genteel appearance, to whom the doctor introduced him as a new mess-mate. By these gentlemen he was conducted to a place where they spent the forenoon in playing at fives, an exercise in which our hero took singular delight; and about one o'clock, a court was held for the trial of two delinquents, who had transgressed the laws of honesty and good order.

The first who appeared at the bar, was an attorney, accused of having picked a gentleman's pocket of his handkerchief; and the sact being proved by incontestible evidence, he received sentence: in consequence of which he was immediately carried to the public pump, and subjected to a severe cascade of cold water. This cause being discussed, they proceeded to the trial of the other offender, who was a Lieutenant of a man of war indicted for a riot, which he had committed in company with a semale not yet taken, against the laws of the place:

place, and the peace of his fellow-prisoners. The culprit had been very obstreperous, and absolutely refused to obey the fummons, with many expressions of contempt and defiance against the authority of the court; upon which the constables were ordered to bring him to the bar, vi & armis; and he was accordingly brought before the judge, after having made a most defperate refistance with a hanger, by which one of the officers was dangerously wounded. This outrage was fuch an aggravation of his crime, that the court would not venture to decide upon it, but remitted him to the fentence of the warden; who, by virtue of his dictatorial power, ordered the rioter to be loaded with irons, and confined in the strong room; which is a dismal dungeon, fituated upon the the fide of the ditch, infested with toads and vermin, furcharged with noisome damps, and impervious to the least ray of light.

Justice being done upon these criminals, our adventurer and his company adjourned to the ordinary, which was kept at the coffee-house; and he found, upon inquiry, that his mess-mates consisted of one officer, two underwriters, three projectors, an alchymist, an attorney, aparfon, a brace of poets, a baronet, and a knight of the bath. The dinner, though not fumptuous, nor very elegantly ferved up, was nevertheless substantial, and opretty well dreffed: the wine was tolerable, and all the guests as chearful as if they had been utter strangers to calamity; fo that our adventurer began to relish the company, and mix in the conversation, with that sprightliness and ease which were peculiar to his dispofition. The repait being ended, the reckoning paid, and part of the gentlemen withdrawn to cards, or other avocations, those who remained, among whom Peregrine made one, agreed to spend the afternoon in conversation over a bowel of punch; and the liquor being produced

duced, they passed the time very socially in various topics of discourse, including many curious anecdotes relating to their own affairs. No man scrupled to own the nature of the debt for which he was confined, unless it happened to be some piddling affair; but, on the contrary, boasted of the importance of the sum as a circumstance that implied his having been a person of consequence in life; and he who had made the most remarkable escapes from bailists was looked upon as a man of superior genius and address.

Among other extraordinary adventures of this kind, none was more romantic than the last elopement atchieved by the officer; who told them he had been arrefted for a debt of two hundred pounds, at a time when he could not command as many pence, and conveyed to the bailiff's house, in which he continued a whole fortnight, moving his lodging higher and higher from time to time, in proportion to the decay of his credit; until, from the parlour, he had made a regular ascent to the garret. There, while he ruminated on his next step. which would have been to the Marshalfea, and saw the night come on, attended with hunger and cold, the wind began to blow, and the tiles of the house rattled with the storm; his imagination was immediately struck with the idea of escaping unperceived amidst the darkness and noise of the tempest, by creeping out at the window of his apartment, and making his way over the tops of the adjoining houses. Glowing with this profpect, he examined the passage, which to his infinite mortification, be found grated with iron-bars on the outfide; but even this difficulty did not divert him from his purpose. Conscious of his own strength, he believed himself able to make an hole through the roof, which feemed to be flender and crazy; and on this supposition he barricadoed the door with the whole furniture of the room; then, fetting himself to work with a poker, he in a few minutes effected a passage for his hand, with which he gradually stript off the boards and tiling, fo as to open a fally port for his whole body, through which he fairly fet himfelf free, groping his way towards the next tenement. Here, however, he met with an unlucky accident; his hat being blown off his head chanced to fall into the court just as one of the bailiff's followers was knocking at the door; and this myrmidon recognizing it, immediately gave the alarm to his chief, who, running up stairs to the garret, forced open he door in a twinkling, not withstanding the precautions which the prisoner had taken, and, with his attendant, purfued the fugitive through his own track. "After this chace had continued some time (said the officer), to the imminent danger of all three, I found my progress suddenly stopped by a sky-light, through which I perceived feven tailors fitting at work upon a beard. Without the least hesitation or previous notice, I plunged among them with my backfide foremoft. Before they could recollect themselves from the consternation occasioned by fuch a strange visit, I told them my fituation, and gave them to understand that there was no time to be loft. One of the number, taking the hint, led me instantly down stairs, and dismissed me at the Areet door, while the bailiff and his follower, arriving at the breach, were detered from entering by the brethern of my deliverer, who, presenting their shears, like a range of chevaux de frife, commanded them to retire on pain of immediate death : and the catchpole, rather than rife his carcafe, consented to discharge the debt, comforting himself with the hope of making me prisoner again. There, however, he was disappointed: I kept foug, and laughed at his escape-warrant, until I was ordered abroad with the regiment, when I conveyed. veyed myself in a hearse to Gravesend, where I embarked for Flanders: but being obliged to come over again on the recruiting service, I was nabbed on another score; and all the satisfaction my first captor has been able to obtain, is a writ of detainer; which I believe will fix me in this place until the parliament, in its great goodness, shall think proper to discharge my debts by a new act of insolvency."

Every body owned that the captain's fuccess was e. qual to the hardiness of his enterprise, which was altogether in the style of a follier; but one of the merchants observed, that he must have been a bailiff of fmall experience, who would trust a prisoner of that consequence in such an unguarded place. " If the captain (faid he) had fallen into the hands of fuch a cunning rafcal as the fellow that arrested me, he would not have found it fuch an eafy matter to escape; for the manner in which I was caught, is perhaps the most extraordinary that ever was practifed in these realms. You must know, gentlemen, I suffered such losses by infuring veffels during the war, that I was obliged to flop payment, though my expectations were fuch as encouraged me to manage one branch of bufiness, without coming to any immediate composition with my creditors. In short, I received confignments from abroad as usual; and that I might not be subject to the vifits of those catchpoles, I never stirred abroad, but turning my first floor into a warehouse, ordered all my goods to be hoisted up by a crane fixed to the upper story of my house. Divers were the fratagems practifed by those ingenious ferrets, with a view of decoying me from the walls of my fortifications. I received innumerable messages from people, who wanted to fee me at certain taverns upon particular busnels

ness: I was summoned into the country, to see my own mother, who was faid to be at the point of death. A gentlewoman, one night, was taken in labour on my threshold: at another time I was disturbed with the cry of murder in the street, and once I was alarmed by a false fire. But being still upon my guard, I battled all their attempts, and thought myself quite secure from their invention; when one of these blood-hounds, inspired, I believe, by the devil himself, contrived a snare by which I was at last entrapped. He made it his bufiness to enquire into the particulars of my traffic; and understanding that, among other things, there were feveral chefts of Florence entered at the custom-house on my behalf, he ordered himself to be inclosed in a box of the same dimensions, with air-holes in the bottom, for the benefit of breathing, and No. III. marked on the cover; and being conveyed to my door in a cart, among other goods, was, in his turn, hoisted up to my ware-house, where I stood with a hammer, in order to open the chefts, that I might compare the contents with the invoice. You may guess my surprise and consternation, when, upon uncovering the box, I faw a bailiff rearing up his head, like Lazarus from the grave, and heard him declare, that he had a writ against me for a thousand pounds. Indeed I aimed the hammer at his head, but in the hurry of my confusion missed my mark: before I could repeat the blow, he started up with great agility, and executed his office in the fight of several evidences, whom he had affembled in the fireet for that purpose; so that I could not possibly disentangle myself from the coil, without incurring an escape-warrant, from which I had no protection. had I known the contents of the cheft, by all that's good! I would have ordered my porter to raise it up, as high as the crane would permit, and then have cut the rope by accident."

"That expedient (faid the knight with the red ribbon) would have discouraged him from such hazardous attempts for the future, and would have been an example in terrorem of all his brethren. They story puts me in mind of a deliverance atchieved by Tom Hackabout, a very flout honest fellow, an old acquaintance of mine, who had been so famous for maining bailiffs, that another gentleman having been ill used at a spunging-house, no sooner obtained his liberty, than, with a view of being revenged upon the landlord, he, for five shillings, bought one of Tom's notes, which fold at a very large discount, and, taking out a writ upon it, put into the hands of the bailiff who had used him ill. The catchpole, after a diligent search, had an opportunity of executing the writ upon the defendant, who, without ceremony, broke one of his arms, fractured his skull, and belaboured him in such a manner, that he lay without sense or motion on the spot. By such exploits, this hero became fo formidable, that no fingle bailiff would undertake to arrest him; so that he appeared in all public places untouched. At length, however, feveral officers of the Marshalfea-court entered into a confederacy against him; and two of the number, attended by three desperate followers, ventured to arrest him one day in the Strand near Hungerford market : he found it impossible to make resistance, because the whole fprung upon him at once, like fo many tygers, and pinioned his arms fo fast, that he could not wag a finger. Perceiving himself fairly overpowered, he defired to be conducted forthwith to jail, and was flowed in a boat accordingly. By the time they had reached the middle of the river, he found means to overlet

the wherry by accident; and every man, difregarding the prisoner, consulted his own safety. As for Hackabout, to whom that element was quite familiar, he mounted astride upon the keel of the boat, which was uppermost, and exhorted the bailists to swim for their lives, protesting before God, that they had no other chance to be saved.

The watermen were immediately taken up by fome of their own friends, who, far from yielding any affiftance to the catchpoles, kept aloof, and exulted in their calamity. In short, two of the five went to the bottom, and never faw the light of God's fun; and the other, three with great difficulty faved themselves, by laying hold on the rudder of a dung-barge, to which they were carried by the stream, while Tom with great deliberation, fwam across to the Surry shore. After this atchievement, he was fo much dreaded by the fraternity, that they shivered at the very mention of his name; and this character, which some people would think an advantage to a man in debt, was the greatest misfortune that could possibly happen to him, because no tradefman would give him credit for the least trifle, on the supposition that he could not indemnify himself in the common course of law,"

The parson did not approve of Mr Hackabout's method of escaping, which he considered as a very unchristian attempt upon the lives of his sellow-subjects: "It is enough (said he) that we elude the laws of our country, without murdering the officers of justice: for my own part, I can lay my hand upon my heart, and safely say, that I forgive from my soul the sellow by whom I was made a prisoner, although the circumstances of his behaviour were treacherous, wicked, and profane. You must know, Mr Pickle, I was one day called into my chapel, in order to join a couple in the holy bands of Voliv matrimony; and my affairs being at that time fo fituated as to lay me under apprehensions of an arrest, I cautiously furveyed the man through a lattice which was made for that purpose, before I could venture to come within his reach. He was clothed in a feaman's jacket and trousers, and had such an air of simplicity in his countenance, as divested me of all suspicion: I therefore. without further scruple, trusted myself in his presence. began to exercise the duty of my function, and had actually performed one half of the ceremony, when the supposed woman, pulling out a paper from her bosom, exclaimed, with a masculine voice, "Sir, you are my prisoner; I have got a writ against you for five hundred pounds." I was thunderstruck at this declaration, not fo much on account of my own misfortune, which (thank heaven) I can bear with patience and refignation, as at the impiety of the wretch, first, in disguising such a worldly aim under the cloak of religion, and, fecondly, in profituting the fervice when there was no occasion for fo doing, his defign having previously taken effect. Yet I forgive him, poor foul! because he knew not what he did; and I hope you, Sir Sipple, will exert the fame Christian virtue towards the man by whom, you was likewise over-reached."

"Oh! damn the rascal (cried the knight); were I his judge, he should be condemned to sames everlasting. A villain! to disgrace me in such a manner before almost all the sashionable company in town." Our hero, expressing a curiosity to know the particulars of this adventure, the knight gratisted his desire, by telling him, that one evening while he was engaged in a party at cards, at a drum in the house of a certain lady of quality, he was given to understand, by one of the servants, that a stranger, very richly dressed, was just arrived in a chair, preceded by five sootment with stambeaux, beaux, and that he refused to come up stairs, until he thould be introduced by Sir Sipple. " Upon this notice (continued the knight) I judged it was some of my quality friends; and having obtained her Ladyship's permission to bring him up, went down to the hall, and perceived a person, whom, to the best of my recollection, I had never feen before. However, his appearance was fo magnificent, that I could not harbour the least suspicion of his true quality; and seeing me advance, he faluted me with a very genteel bow, obferving, that though he had not the honour of my acquaintance, he could not dispense with waiting upon me, even on that occasion, in consequence of a letter which he had received from a particular friend. So faying, he put a paper into my hand, intimating that he had got a writ against me for ten thousand pounds, and that it would be my interest to submit without refistance, for he was provided with a guard of twenty men, who furrounded the door in different disguises, determined to fecure me against all opposition. Enraged at the scoundrel's finesse, and trusting to the asfistance of the real footmen affembled in the hall, " So you are a rascally bailiff (said 1) who have assumed the garb of a gentleman in order to disturb her Ladyship's company. Take this fellow, my lads, and roll him in the kennel; here are ten guineas for your trouble. These words were no sooner pronounced than I was feized, lifted up, and placed in a chair, and carried off in the twinkling of an eye; not but that the fervants of the house and some other footmen made a motion towards my refcue, and alarmed all the company above; but the bailiff affirming, with undaunted effrontery, that I was taken up upon an affair of state, and so many people appearing in his behalf, the countess would not fuffer the supposed messenger to be insulted, and he N 2 carried .

carried me to the county-jail without further let or molestation."

CHAP. XCVIII.

Pickle seems tolerably well reconciled to his cage, and is, by the clergyman, entertained with the memoirs of a noted personage, whom he sees by accident in the Fleet.

THE knight had scarce finished this narrative, when our hero was told, that a gentleman in the coffee. room wanted to fee him; and when he went this ther he found his friend Crabtree, who had transacted all his affairs according to the determination of the preceding day; and now gave him an account of the remarks he had overheard on the fubject of his misfortune; for the manner of the arrest was so public and extraordinary, that those who were present immediately propagated it among their acquaintance, and it was that fame evening discoursed upon at several tea and cardtables, with this variation from the truth, that the debt amounted to twelve thousand, instead of twelve hundred pounds, from which circumstance it was conjectured that Peregrine was a bite from the beginning, who had found credit on account of his effrontery and appearance, and imposed upon the town as a young gentle. man of fortune. They rejoiced, therefore, at his calamity, which they confidered as a just punishment for his fraud and prefumption, and began to review certain particulars of his conduct, that plainly demonstrated him to be a rank adventurer, long before he had arrived at this end of his career .- Pickle, who now believed his glory was fet for ever, received this intelligence with that disdain which enables a man to detach himfelf effectually from the world, and, with great tranquillity, gave the misanthrope an entertaining detail of what he had seen and heard since their last parting. While they amused themselves in this manner over a dish of cossee, they were joined by the parson, who congratulated our hero upon his bearing mischance with such philosophic quiet, and began to regale the two friends with some curious circumstances relating to the private history of the several prisoners, as they happened to come in.

At length a gentleman entered, at fight of whom the clergyman rofe up, and faluted him with a most reverential bow, which was graciously returned by the firanger, who, with a young man that attended him, retired to the other end of the room. They were no fooner out of hearing, than the communicative priest defired his company to take particular notice of this person to whom he had paid his respects: " That man (said he) is this day one of the most flagrant instances of neglected virtue which the world can produce. Over and a. bove a cool, discerning head, fraught with uncommon learning and experience, he is possessed of such fortitude and resolution, as no difficulties can discourage, and no danger impair: and so indefatigable is his humanity. that, even now, while he is furrounded with fuch embaraffments as would distract the brain of any ordinary mortal, he has added confiderably to his incumbrances, by taking under his protection that young gentleman, who, induced by his character, appealed to his benevolence for redress of the grievances under which he labours from the villany of his guardian."

Peregrine's curiofity being excited by this encomium, he asked the name of this generous patron, of which, when he was informed, " I am no stranger (said he) to the fame of that gentleman, who has made a confiderable noise in the world, on account of that great cause he undertook in defence of an unhappy orphan; and fince he is a person of such an amiable disposition, I am heartily forry to find that his endeavours have not met with that successful issue which their good fortune, in the beginning, feemed to promife. Indeed, the circumstance of his espousing that cause, was so uncommon and romantic, and the depravity of the human heart fo universal, that some people, unacquainted with his real character, imagined his views were altogether felfish; and some were not wanting who affirmed he was a mere adventurer. Nevertheless, I must do him the justice to own, I have heard some of the most virulent of those who were concerned on the other fide of the question, bear testimony in his favour, observing, that he was deceived into the expence of the whole, by the plaufible flory which at first engaged his compassion. Your description of his character confirms me in the fame opinion; though I am quite ignorant of the affair; the particulars of which I should be glad to learn, as well as a genuine account of his own life, many circumstances of which are by his enemies, I believe, egregiously misrepresented."

faction which I am glad to find myself capable of giving you: I have had the pleasure of being acquainted with Mr M—from his youth, and every thing which I shall relate concerning him, you may depend upon as a fact which hath fallen under my own cognizance, or been vouched upon the credit of undoubted evidence.

Mr M——'s father was a minister of the established church of Scotland, descended from a very ancient clan, and his mother nearly related to a noble family in the northern cifed.

northern part of that kingdom. While the fon was boarded at a public school, where he made good progress in the Latin tongue, his father died, and he was' left an orphan to the care of an uncle, who, finding him determined against any servile employment, kept him at school, that he might prepare himself for the univerfity, with a view of being qualified for his father's profession.

Here his imagination was fo heated by the warlike atchievements he found recorded in the Latin authors. fuch as Crefar, Curtius, and Buchanan, that he was feized with an irrefiftible thirst of military glory, and a defire of trying his fortune in the army. His majesty's troops taking the field, in confequence of the rebellion which happened in the year seventeen hundred and fifteen, this young adventurer, thinking no life equal to that of a foldier, found means to furnish himself with a fufil and bayonet, and, leaving the school, repaired to the camp near Stirling, with a view of fignalizing himfelf in the field, though he was at that time but just turned of thirteen. He offered his service to several officers, in hope of being enlitted in their companies; but they would not receive him, because they rightly concluded that he was some school-boy broke loofe, without the knowledge or confent of his relations. Notwithstanding this discouragement, he continued in camp, curiously prying into every part of the service; and fuch was the resolution conspicuous in him, even at fuch a tender age, that, after his fmall finances were exhausted, he perfisted in his design; and because he would not make his wants known, actually fubfifted for feveral days on hips, haws, and floes, and other fpontaneous fruits, which he gathered in the woods and fields. Meanwhile, he never failed to be present when any regiment or corps of men were drawn out to be exereised and reviewed, and accompanied them in all their evolutions, which he had learned to great persection, by observing the companies which were quartered in the place where he was at school. This eagerness and perseverence attracted the notice of many officers, who, after having commended his spirit and zeal, pressed him to return to his parents, and even threatened to expel him from the camp, if he would not comply with their advice.

These remonstrances having no other effect than that of warning him to avoid his monitors, they thought proper to alter their behaviour towards him, took him into their protection, and even into their mess; and what, above all other marks of favour, pleased the young soldier most, permitted him to incorporate in the battalion, and take his turn of duty with the other men. In this happy situation he was discovered by a relation of his mother, who was a captain in the army, and who used all his authority and influence in persuading M—to return to school; but sinding him deas to his admonitions and threats, he took him under his own care, and, when the army marched to Dumblane, lest him at Stirling, with an express injunction to keep himself within the walls.

He temporized with his kinsman, fearing that, should he seem refractory, the captain would have ordered him to be shut up in the castle. Instanced with the desire of seeing a battle, his relation no sooner marched off the ground, than he mixed in with another regiment, to which his former patrons belonged, and proceeded to the field, where he distinguished himself, even at that early time of life, by his gallantry, in helping to retrieve a pair of colours belonging to M—n's regiment; so that, after the affair, he was presented to the Duke of Argyle, and recommended strongly to Brigadier Grant, who who invited him into his regiment, and promifed to provide for him with the first opportunity: But that gentleman in a little time lost his command upon the Duke's disgrace, and the regiment was ordered for Ireland, being given to Colonel Nassau, whose favour the young volunteer acquired to such a degree, that he was recommended to the King for an ensigncy, which in all probability he would have obtained, had not the regiment been unluckily reduced.

In confequence of this reduction, which happened in the most fevere season of the year, he was obliged to return to his own country, through infinite hardships, to which he was exposed from the narrowness of his circumflances: and continuing fill enamoured of a military life, he entered into the regiment of Scotch Greys, at that time commanded by the late Sir James Campbell, who being acquainted with his family and character, encouraged him with the promise of speedy preferment. In this corps he remained three years, during which he had no opportunity of feeing actual fervice, except at the affair of Glensheel; and this life of infipid quiet must have hung heavy upon a youth of M--- 's active disposition, had not he found exercise for the mind, in reading books of amusement, history, voyages, and geography, together with those that treated of the art of war ancient and modern, for which he contracted fuch an eager appetite, that he used to spend fixteen hours a-day in this employment. About that time he became acquainted with a gentleman of learning and tafte, who observing his indefatigable application, and insatiable thirst after knowledge, took upon himself the charge of superintending his studies; and by the direction of such an able guide, the young foldier converted his intention to a more folid and profitable course of reading. inordinate was his defire of making speedy advances in the paths of learning, that within the compass of three months he diligently perused the writings of Locke. and Malbranche, and made himself matter of the first fix, and of the eleventh and twelfth books of Euclid's Elements. He confidered Puffendorf and Grotius with uncommon care, acquired a tolerable degree of know. ledge in the French language; and his imagination was fo captivated with the defire of learning, that feeing no prospect of a war, or views of being provided for in the fervice, he quitted the army, and went through a regular course of university education. Having made such progress in his studies, he resolved to qualify himself. for the church, and acquired such a slock of school-divinity under the instructions of a learned professor at Edinburgh, that he more than once mounted the roffrum in the public hall, and held forth with uncommon applause: but being discouraged from a prosecution of his plan, by the unreasonable austerity of some of the Scotch clergy, by whom the most indifferent and innocent words and actions were often misconstrued into levity and misconduct, he resolved to embrace the first favourable opportunity of going abroad, being inflamed with a defire of feeing foreign countries, and actually fet out for Holland, where, for the space of two years, he studied the Roman law, with the law of auture and nations, under the famous professors Tolieu and Barbeyrac.

Having thus finished his school education, he set out for Paris, with a view to make himself perfect in the French language, and learn such useful exercises as might be acquired with the wretched remnant of his slender estate, which was by that time reduced very low. In his journey through the Netherlands he went to Namur, and paid his respects to Bishop Strickland and General Collier, by whom he was received with great civility,

h

P

in consequence of letters of recommendation with which he was provided from the Hague, and the old general affured him of his protection and interest for a pair of colours, if he was disposed to enter into the Dutch service.

Though he was by that time pretty well cured of his military Quixotism, he would not totally decline the generous proffer, for which he thanked him in the most grateful terms, telling the general, that he would pay his duty to him on his return from France, and then, if he could determine upon re-engaging in the army, should think himself highly honoured in being under his command.

After a stry of two months in Flanders, he proceeded to Paris, and, far from taking up his habitation in the suburbs of St Germain, according to the custom of English travellers, he hired a private lodging on the other side of the river, and associated chiesly with French officers, who (their youthful sallies being over) are allowed to be the politest gentlemen in that kingdom. In this scheme he found his account so much, that he could not but wonder at the folly of his countrymen, who lose the main scope of their going abroad, by spending their time and fortune idly with one another.

During his residence in Holland he had made himself acquainted with the best authors in the French language, so that he was able to share in their conversation; a circumstance from which he found great benefit; for, it not only improved him in his knowledge of that tongue, but also tended to the enlargement of his acquaintance, in the course of which he contracted intimacies in some families of good sashion, especially those of the long robe, which would have enabled him to pass his time very agreeably, had he been a little easier in point of fortune: but his sinances, notwithstanding the most rigid occonomy, being in a few months reduced to a very low ebb, the prospect of indigence threw a damp upon all his pleasures; though he never suffered himself to be thereby, in any degree, dispirited; being in that respect of so happy a disposition, that conscious poverty or abundance made very slight impressions upon his mind.

(P)

This confumption of his cash, however, involved him in some perplexity; and he deliberated with himself, whether he should return to General Collier, or repair to London, where he might possibly fall into some business not unbecoming a gentleman; though he was very much mortified to find himself incapable of gratifying an inordinate desire which possessed him of making the grand tour, or, at least, of visiting the southern parts of France.

While he thus hefitated between different suggestions, he was one morning visited by a gentleman who had fought and cultivated his friendship, and for whom he had done a good office, in supporting him with spirit against a brutal German, with whom he had an affair This gentleman came to propose a party of honour. for a fortnight to Fountainbleau, where the court then was; and the propofal being declined by M- with more than usual stiffness, his friend was very urgent to know the reason of his refusal, and at length, with some confusion, said, " Perhaps your finances are low." M- replied, that he had wherewithal to defray the expence of his journey to London, where he could be furnished with a fresh supply; and this answer was no fooner made, than the other taking him by the hand, "My dear friend, (faid he) I am not unacquainted with your affairs, and would have offered you my credit long ago, if I had thought it would be acceptable; even now, I do not pretend to give you money, but defire, and infilt infift upon it, that you will accept of the loan of these two pieces of paper, to be repaid when you marry a woman with a fortune of twenty thousand pounds, or obtain an employment of a thousand a-year." So saying, he prefented him with two actions of about two thousand livres each.

M- was aftonished at this unexpected instance of generofity in a stranger, and with suitable acknowledgement peremptorily refused to incur such an obligation; but at length he was, by dint of importunity and warm expostulation, prevailed upon to accept one of the actions, on condition that the gentleman would take his note for the fum; and this he absolutely reected, until M __ promised to draw upon him for double the value, or more, in case he should at any time want a farther supply. This uncommon act of friendship and generofity, M ____ afterwards had an opportunity to repay tenfold, though he could not help regretting the occasion, on his friends account. That worthy man having, by placing too much confidence in a villanous lawyer, and a chain of other misfortunes, involved himfelf and his amiable lady in a labyrinth of difficulties, which threatened the total ruin of his family, Mfelt the inexpressible satisfaction of delivering his benefactor from the snare.

e

ir

ty

en

th

to ne

¥. 97

he

be

0.0

nd,

rith

ong

ow,

and nfift Being thus reinforced by the generofity of his friend, M— refolved to execute his former plan of feeing the fouth of France, together with the fea-ports of Spain as far as Cadiz, from whence he proposed to take a passage for London by sea, and with this view sent forward his trunks by the Diligence to Lyons, determined to ride post, in order to enjoy a better view of the country, and for the conveniency of stopping at those places where there was any thing remarkable to be seen or inquired into. While he was employed in taking leave

Vol. IV. O of

R

most rigid occonomy, being in a few months reduced to a very low ebb, the prospect of indigence threw a damp upon all his pleasures; though he never suffered himself to be thereby, in any degree, dispirited; being in that respect of so happy a disposition, that conscious poverty or abundance made very slight impressions upon his mind.

This consumption of his cash, however, involved him in some perplexity; and he deliberated with himself, whether he should return to General Collier, or repair to London, where he might possibly fall into some business not unbecoming a gentleman; though he was very much mortised to find himself incapable of gratifying an inordinate desire which possessed him of making the grand tour, or, at least, of visiting the southern parts of France.

While he thus hefitated between different suggestions, he was one morning visited by a gentleman who had fought and cultivated his friendship, and for whom he had done a good office, in supporting him with spirit against a brutal German, with whom he had an affair This gentleman came to propose a party for a fortnight to Fountainbleau, where the court then was; and the proposal being declined by M- with more than usual stiffness, his friend was very urgent to know the reason of his refusal, and at length, with some confusion, faid, " Perhaps your finances are low." M--- replied, that he had wherewithal to defray the expence of his journey to London, where he could be furnished with a fresh supply; and this answer was no fooner made, than the other taking him by the hand, " My dear friend, (faid he) I am not unacquainted with your affairs, and would have offered you my credit long ago, if I had thought it would be acceptable; even now, I do not pretend to give you money, but defire, and infilt

of

infift upon it, that you will accept of the loan of these two pieces of paper, to be repaid when you marry a woman with a fortune of twenty thousand pounds, or obtain an employment of a thousand a-year." So saying, he prefented him with two actions of about two thousand livres each.

M- was astonished at this unexpected instance of generofity in a stranger, and with suitable acknowledgement peremptorily refused to incur such an obligation; but at length he was, by dint of importunity and warm expostulation, prevailed upon to accept one of the actions, on condition that the gentleman would take his note for the fum; and this he absolutely reected, until M ___ promised to draw upon him for double the value, or more, in case he should at any time want a farther supply. This uncommon act of friendship and generofity, M ____ afterwards had an opportunity to repay tenfold, though he could not help regretting the occasion, on his friends account. That worthy man having, by placing too much confidence in a villanous lawyer, and a chain of other misfortunes, involved himfelf and his amiable lady in a labyrinth of difficulties, which threatened the total ruin of his family, Mfelt the inexpressible satisfaction of delivering his benefactor from the fnare.

9

t

r

y

n

h

to ne

he

be

0.0

nd,

ith

gac

ow,

and fift

VOL. IV.

Being thus reinforced by the generofity of his friend, M— refolved to execute his former plan of feeing the fouth of France, together with the fea-ports of Spain as far as Cadiz, from whence he proposed to take a passage for London by sea, and with this view sent forward his trunks by the Diligence to Lyons, determined to ride post, in order to enjoy a better view of the country, and for the conveniency of stopping at those places where there was any thing remarkable to be seen or inquired into. While he was employed in taking leave of his Parisian friends, who furnished him with abundant recommendation, a gentleman of his own country, who spoke little or no French, hearing of his intention, begged the favour of accompanying him in his expedition.

With this new companion, therefore, he fet out for Lyons, where he was perfectly well received by the intendant and some of the best families of the place, in confequence of his letters of recommendation; and after a short stay in that city, proceeded down the Rhone to Avignon, in what is called the coche d'eau; then vifiting the principal towns of Dauphine, Languedoc, and Provence, he returned to the delightful city of Marfeilles, where he and his fellowstraveller were fo much captivated by the ferenity of the air, the goodnature and hospitality of the sprightly inhabitants, that they never dreamed of changing their quarters during the whole winter and part of the fpring : here he acquired the acquaintance of the Marquis D'Argens, attorney-general in the parliament of Aix, and of his eldest son, who now makes so great a figure in the literary world; and when the affair of Father Gerard and Madamoiselle Cadiere began to make a noise, he accompanied these two gentlemen to Toulon, where the Marquis was ordered to take precognition of the facts.

On his return to Marseilles, he found a certain noble lord of great fortune under the direction of a Swiss governor, who had accommodated him with two of his own relations of the same country, by way of companions, together with five servants in his train. They being absolute strangers in the place, M——introduced them to the intendant and several other good samilies; and had the good fortune to be so agreeable to his lordship, that he proposed, and even pressed him to live with him in England as a friend and companion; and to take upon upon him the superintendance of his affairs, in which case he would settle upon him four hundred a-year for life.

This proposal was too advantageous to be slighted by a person of no fortune or fixed establishment; he therefore made no difficulty of closing with it : but as his lordship's departure was fixed to a short day, and he urged him to accompany him to Paris, and from thence to England, M thought it would be improper and indecent to interfere with the office of his governor, who might take umbrage at his favour, and therefore excused himself from a compliance with his lordship's request, until his minority should be expired, as he was within a few months of being of age. However, he repeated his importunities fo earnestly, and the governor joined in the request with such appearance of cordiality, that he was prevailed upon to comply with their joint defire; and in a few days fet out with them for Paris by the way of Lyons. But before they had been three days in this city, M perceived a total change in the behaviour of the Swiss and his two relations, who, in all probability became jealous of his influence with his lordship; and he no sooner made this discovery, than he resolved to withdraw bimself from such a disagreeable participation of that young nobleman's favour. He therefore, in spite of all his lordship's intreaties and remonstrances, quitted him for the present; alleging, as a pretext, that he had a longing defire to fee Switzerland and the banks of the Rhine, and promifing to meet him again in England.

This his intention being made known to the governor and his friends, their countenances immediately cleared up, their courtefy and complaifance returned, and they even furnished him with letters for Geneva, Lausane, Bern, and Soleures; in consequence of which he met with unufual civilities at these places. Having made this tour with his Scotch friend, (who came up to him before he left Lyons) and visited the most considerable towns on both sides of the Rhine, and the courts of the Electors Palatine, Mentz, and Cologn, he arrived in Holland; and from thence, through the Netherlands, repaired to London, where he found my lord just returned from Paris.

g

d

His lordship received him with expressions of uncommon joy, would not suffer him to stir from him for several days, and introduced him to his relations.

M— accompanied his lordship from London to his country-scat, where he was indeed treated with great friendship and considence, and consulted in every thing; but the noble peer never once made mention of the annuity which he had promised to settle upon him; nor did M— remind him of it, because he conceived it was his affair to sulfil his engagements of his own accord. M— being tired of the manner of living at this place made an excursion to Bath, where he staid about a fortnight, to partake of the diversions, and, upon his return, found his lordship making dispositions for another journey to Paris.

Surprised at this sudden resolution, he endeavoured to distuade him from it; but his remonstrances were rendered ineffectual by the infinuations of a foreigner, who had come over with him, and filled his imagination with extravagant notions of pleasure, infinitely superior to any which he could enjoy while he was in the transmels, and under the restraints of a governor. He therefore turned a deaf ear to all M——'s arguments, and intreated him to accompany him in the journey; but this gentleman, foreseeing that a young man like my lord, of strong passions, and easy to be misled, would, in all probility, squander away great sums of money, in a way that would neither do credit to himfelf, or to those who were concerned with him, resisted all his solicitations, on pretence of having business consequence at London; and afterwards had reason to be extremely well pleased with his own conduct in this particular.

Before he fet out on this expedition, M-, in justice to himself, reminded him of the proposal which he had made to him at Marfeilles, defiring to know if ha had altered his design in that particular, in which case he would turn his thoughts some other way, as he would not in the least be thought to intrude or pin himself upon any man. My lord protested, in the most solemn manner, that he still continued in his former resolution, and, again befeeching him to bear him company into France, promised that every thing should be settled to his fatisfaction, upon their return to England, Mhowever, fill perfifted in his refufal, for the abovementioned reason; and though he never heard more of the annuity, he, nevertheless, continued to serve his lordhip with his advice and good offices ever after; particularly in directing his choice to an alliance with a lady of eminent virtue, the daughter of a noble lord, more conspicuous for his shining parts than the splendour of his titles, (a circumstance upon which he always reflected with particular fatisfaction, as well on account of the extraordinary merit of the lady, as because it vested in her children a considerable part of that great estate, which, of right belonged to her grandmother). and afterwards put him in a way to retrieve his estate from a heavy load of debt he had contracted. When my lord fet out on his Paris expedition, the money M had received from his generous friend at Paris, was almost reduced to the last guinea. He had not yet reaped the least benefit from his engagements with his lordship; and, disdaining to ask for a supply from him, he knew not how to subsist, with any degree of credit, till his return.

This uncomfortable prospect was the more disagreeable to him, as, at that time of life, he was much inclined to appear in the gay world, had contracted a tafte for plays, operas, and other public diversions, and acquired an acquaintance with many people of good fashion, which could not be maintained without a confiderable expence. In this emergency, he thought he could not employ his idle time more profitably, than in translating, from foreign languages, such books as were then chiefly in vogue; and, upon application to a friend, who was a man of letters, he was furnished with as much bufiness of that kind as he could possibly manage, and wrote some pamphlets on the reigning controverfies of that time, that had the good fortune to please. He was also concerned in a monthly journal of literature, and the work was carried on by the two friends. jointly, though M- did not at all appear in the partnership. By these means, he not only spent his mornings in useful exercise, but supplied himself with money for what the French call the menus plaifirs, during the whole summer. He frequented all the assemblies in and about London, and confiderably enlarged his acquaintance among the fair fex.

He had, upon his first arrival in England, become acquainted with a lady at an affembly not far from London: and though at that time he had no thoughts of extending his views further than the usual gallantry of the place, he met with such distinguishing marks of her regard in the sequel, and was so particularly encouraged by the advice of another lady, with whom he had been intimate in France, and who was now of their parties, that he could not help entertaining hopes of making making an impression upon the heart of his agreeable partner, who was a young lady of an ample fortune, and great expectations. He therefore cultivated her good graces with all the assiduity and address of which he was master, and succeeded so well in his endeavours, that, after a due course of attendance, and the death of an aunt, by which she received an accession of fortune, to the amount of three and twenty thousand pounds, he ventured to declare his passion; and she not only heard him with patience and approbation, but also replied in terms adequate to his warmest wish.

Finding himself so favourably received, he pressed her to fecure his happinels by marriage; but to this proposal she objected the recency of her kinswoman's death. which would have rendered fuch a step highly inde cent, and the displeasure of her other relations, from whom the had ftill greater expectations, and who at that time importuned her to marry a coufin of her own. whom the could not like. However, that M ___ might have no cause to repine at her delay, she freely entered with him into an intimacy of correspondence; during which, nothing could have added to their mutual felicity, which was the more poignant and refined, from the mysterious and romantic manner of their enjoying it; for, though he publicly vifited her as an acquaintance, his behaviour, on these occasions, was always so distant, respectful, and reserved, that the rest of the company could not possibly suspect the nature of their reciprocal attachment; in confequence of which, they used to have private interviews unknown to every soul upon earth, except her maid, who was necessarily entrusted with the fecret.

In this manner they enjoyed the conversation of each other for above twelve months, without the least interruption; and though the stability of Mr M——'s fortune entirely depended upon their marriage, yet, as he perceived his mistress so averse to it, he never urged it with vehemence, nor was at all anxious on that score; being easily induced to defer a ceremony, which, as he then thought, could in no shape have added to their satisfaction, though he hath since altered his sentiments.

Be that as it will, his indulgent mistress, in order to set his mind at ease in that particular, and in sull confidence of his honour, insisted on his accepting a deed of gift of her whole fortune, in consideration of their intended marriage; and, after some difficulty, he was prevailed upon to receive this proof of her esteem, well knowing that it would still be in his power to return the obligation. Though she often intreated him to take upon himself the entire administration of her sinances, and, upon divers occasions, pressed him to accept of large sums, he never once abused her generous disposition, or solicited her for money, except for some humane purpose, which she was always more ready to sulfil than he to propose.

In the course of this correspondence, he became acquainted with some of her semale relations, and, among the rest, with a young lady, so eminently adorned with all the qualifications of mind and person, that, notwithstanding all his philosophy and caution, he could not behold and converse with her, without being deeply smitten with her charms. He did all in his power to discourage this dangerous invasion in the beginning, and to conceal the least symptom of it from her relation: he summoned all his reslection to his aid; and thinking it would be base and dishonest to cherish any sentiment repugnant to the affection which he owed to a mistress who had placed such unlimited confidence in him, he attempted to stifle the infant slame, by avoiding the amiable inspirer of it. But the passion had taken too deep a root at his heart, to be so easily extirpated; his absence from the dear object increased the impatience of his love. The intestine constict between that and gratitude, deprived him of his rest and appetite. He was, in a short time, emaciated by continual watching, anxiety, and want of nourishment; and so much altered from his usual cheerfulness, that his mistress, being surprised and alarmed at the change, which, from the symptoms, she judged was owing to some uneasiness of mind, took all imaginable pains to discover the cause.

In all probability it did not escape her penetration, for the more than once asked if he was in love with her cousin, protesting that, far from being an obstacle to his happiness, the would, in that case, be an advocate for his passion. However, this declaration was never made, without manifest signs of anxiety and uneasiness, which made such an impression upon the heart of M——, that he resolved to facrifice his happiness, and even this life, rather than take any step which might be construed into an injury or insult to a person who had treated him with such generosity and goodness.

In consequence of this resolution, he formed another, which was to go abroad, under pretence of rocovering his health, but in reality to avoid the temptation, as well as the suspicion of being inconstant; and in this design he was consirmed by his physician, who actually thought him in the first stage of a consumption, and therefore advised him to repair to the south of France. He communicated his design, with the doctor's opinion, to the lady, who agreed to it with much less difficulty than he found in conquering his own reluctance at parting with the dear object of his love. The consent of his generous mistress being obtained, he waited upon her with the instrument whereby she had made the conveyance of her fortune to him; and all his remonstrances being insufficient to persuade her to take it back, he cancelled it in her presence, and placed it in that state upon her toilet while she was dressing; whereupon she shed a torrent of tears, saying she now plainly perceived that he wanted to tear himself from her, and that his affections were settled upon another. He was sensibly affected by this proof of her concern; and endeavoured to clam the perturbation of her mind, by vowing eternal sidelity, and pressing her to accept of his hand, in due form, before his departure. By these means her transports were quieted for the present, and the marriage deferred, for the same prudential reasons which had hitherto prevented it.

Matters being thus compromised, and the day fixed for his departure, she, together with her faithful maid, one morning visited him for the first time at his own lodgings; and, after breakfast, desiring to speak with him in private, he conducted her into another room, where affuming an unufual gravity of aspect, " My dear M ___ (faid the), you are now going to leave me, and God alone knows if ever we shall meet again: therefore, if you really love me with that tenderness which you profess, you will accept of this mark of my friendship and unalterable affection; it will at least be a provision for your journey: and if any accident should befal me, before I have the happiness of receiving you again into my arms, I shall have the fatisfaction of knowing that you are not altogether without resource." So faying, she put an embroidered pocket-book into his hand. He expressed the high sense he had of her generofity and affection, in the most pathetic terms, and begged leave to suspend his acceptance, until he should know the contents of her present, which was so extraordinary.

ordinary, that he absolutely refused to receive it: he was, however, by her repeated intreaties, in a manner compelled to receive about one half, and she afterwards insisted upon his taking a reinforcement of a considerable sum for the expence of his journey.

Having stayed with her ten days beyond the time he had fixed for his departure, and fettled the method of their correspondence, he took his leave with an heart full of forrow, anxiety, and distraction, produced from the different fuggestions of his duty and love. He then let out for France, and, after a short stay at Paris, proceeded to Aix, in Provence, and from thence to Marfeilles, at which two places he continued for some months; but nothing he met with being able to dif. fipate those melancholy ideas which still preyed upon his imagination, and affected his spirits, he endeavoured to elude them with a succession of new objects; and. with that view, perfuaded a counsellor of the parliament of Aix, a man of great worth, learning, and goodhumour, to accompany him in making a tour of those parts of France which he had not yet feen. On their return from this excursion, they found at Aix an Italian Abbe, a person of character, and great knowledge of men and books, who, having travelled all over Germany and France, was fo far on his return to his own country.

M— having, by means of his friend the counsellor, contracted an acquaintance with this gentleman, and being defirous of seeing some parts of Italy, particularly the carnival at Venice, they set out together from Marseilles, in a tartan, for Genoa, coasting it all the way, and lying on shore every night. Having shown him what was most remarkable in this city, his friend the Abbe was so obliging as to conduct him through Tuscany, and the most remarkable cities in Lombardy to

•

0

.

d

d

3.

Venice.

Venice, where M ___ infifted upon defraying the expence of the whole tour, in confideration of the Abbe's complaisence, which had been of infinite service to him in the course of this expedition. Having remained five weeks at Venice, he was preparing to fet out for Rome with some English gentlemen whom he had met by accident, when he was all of a fudden obliged to change his resolution, by some disagreeable letters which he received from London. He had, from his first departure, corresponded with his generous, though inconfant mistress, with a religious exactness and punctuality; nor was she, for some time, less observant of the agreement they had made. Nevertheless, she by degrees became fo negligent and cold in her expression, and so flack in her correspondence, that he could not help observing and upbraiding her with such indifference; and her endeavours to palliate it, were supported by pretexts fo frivolous, as to be easily feen through by a lover of very little discernment.

While he tortured himself with conjectures about the cause of this unexpected change, he received such intelligence from England, as, when joined with what he himself had perceived by her manner of writing, left him little or no room to doubt of her fickleness and inconstancy. Nevertheless, as he knew by experience that informations of that kind are not to be entirely relied upon, he resolved to be more certainly apprised; and, for that end, departed immediately for London, by the way of Tirol, Bavaria, Alsace, and Paris.

On his arrival in England, he learned, with infinite concern, that his intelligence had not been at all exaggerated; and his forrow was inexpressible, to find a person, endowed with so many other noble and amiable qualities, seduced into an indiscretion, that, of necessity, ruined the whole plan which had been concerted between

to

tween them for their mutual happiness. She made several attempts, by letters and interviews, to palliate her conduct, and soften him into a reconciliation; but his honour being concerned, he remained deaf to all her intreaties and proposals. Nevertheless, I have often heard him say, that he could not help loving her, and revering the memory of a person to whose generosity and goodness he owed his fortune, and one whose soibles were overbalanced by a thousand good qualities. He often insisted on making restitution; but far from complying with that proposal, she afterwards often endeavoured to lay him under yet greater obligations of the same kind, and importuned him, with the warmest solicitations, to renew their former correspondence, which he as often declined.

1,

r -

d

y

he

n-

he

eft

in-

hat

up-

for

May

nite

kag.

nd a

able

fity,

be-

reen

M- took this instance of the inconstancy of the fex fo much to heart, that he had almost resolved, for the future, to keep clear of all engagements for life, and returned to Paris in order to distipate his anxiety, where he hired an apartment in one of the academies, in the exercises whereof he took fingular delight. During his residence at this place, he had the good fortune to ingratiate himself with a great general, a descendant of one of the most ancient and illustrious families in France ; having attracted his notice by some remarks he had written on Folard's Polybius, which were accidentally shown to that great man by one of his aids du-camp. who was a particular friend of M The favour he had thus acquired, was strengthened by his assiduities and attention. Upon his return to London, he fent some of Handel's newest compositions to the prince. who was particularly fond of that gentleman's productions, together with Clark's edition of Cæsar; and in the spring of the same year, before the French army took the field, he was honoured with a most obliging VOL. IV. letter letter from the prince, inviting him to come over, if he wanted to fee the operations of the campaign and defiring he would give himfelf no trouble about his equipage.

M having still some remains of a military dispo. fition, and conceiving this to be a more favourable op. portunity than any he should ever meet with again. readily embraced the offer, and facrificed the foft delights of love, which at that time he enjoyed without control, to an eager, laborious, and dangerous curiofity. In that and the following campaign, during which he was prefent at the fiege of Philipsburg, and several other actions, he enlarged his acquaintance among the French officers, especially those of the graver fort, who had a taste for books and literature; and the friendship and interest of those gentlemen were afterwards of fingular service to him, though in an affair altogether foreign from their profession.

He had all along made diligent inquiry into the trade and manufactures of the countries through which he had occasion to travel, more particularly those of Holland, England, and France; and as he was well acquainted with the revenue and farms of this last kingdom, he faw, with concern, the great disadvantages under which our tobacco-trade (the most considerable branch of our commerce with that people) was carried on; what inconfiderable returns were made to the planters out of the low price given by the French company; and how much it was in the power of that company to reduce it fill lower. M-had formed a scheme to remedy this evil, so far as it related to the national loss orgain, by not permitting the duty of one penny in the pound, old fubfidy, to be drawn back on tobacco re-exported. He demonstrated to the ministry of that time, that so inconsiderable a duty could not in the least diminish the demand from abroad, which was the only circumflance to be apprehended, and that the yearly produce of that revenue would amount to one hundred and twenty thousand pounds, without one shilling additional expence to the public; but the ministry having the excise scheme then in contemplation, could think of no other till that should be tried; and that project having miscarried, he renewed his application, when they approved of his scheme in every particular, but discovered a surprising backwardness to carry it into execution.

His expectation in this quarter being disappointed, he, by the interposition of his friends, presented a plan to the French company, in which he set forth the advantages that would accrue to themselves, from fixing the price, and securing that fort of tobacco which best suited the taste of the public and their manufacture: and finally proposed to furnish them with any quantity at the price which they paid in the port of London.

0

1-

0.

de

he

ol-

nt-

he

ch

ur

in-

of

low

e it

edy

ain,

and,

ted.

it fo

inish the

After some dispute, they agreed to his proposal, and contracted with him for fifteen thousand hogsheads a-year, for which they obliged themselves to pay ready money, on its arrival in any one or more convenient ports in the south or western coasts of Great Britain, that he should please to fix upon for that purpose. M—no sooner obtained this contract than he immediately set out for America, in order to put it in execution; and by way of companion carried with him a little French Abbe, a man of humour, wit, and learning, with whom he had been long acquainted, and for whom he had done many good offices.

On his arrival at Virginia, which opportunely happened at a time when all the gentlemen were assembled in the capital of that province, he published a memorial, representing the disadvantages under which their trade was carried on, the true method of redressing their own grievances in that respect, and proposing to contract with them for the yearly quantity of fifteen thousand hogsheads of such tobacco as was fit for the French market, at the price which he demonstrated to be considerably greater than that which they had formerly received.

This remonstrance met with all the fuccess and encouragement he could expect: the principal planters, seeing their own interest concerned, readily assented to the proposal, which, through their influence, was also relished by the rest; and the only difficulty that remained, related to the security for payment of the bills on the arrival of the tobacco in England, and to the time stipulated for the continuance of the contract.

In order to remove these objections, Mr M-returned to Europe, and found the French company of farmers disposed to agree to every thing he defired for facilitating the execution of the contract, and perfectly well pleafed with the fample which he had already fent: but his good friend the Abbe, (whom he had left behind him in America) by an unparalleled piece of treachery, found means to overturn the whole project. He fecretly wrote a memorial to the company, importing, that he found by experience, M- could afford to furnish them at a much lower price than that which they had agreed to give; and that, by being in possession of the contract for five years, as was intended according to the propofal, he would have the company fo much in his power, that they must afterwards submit to any price he should please to impose; and that if they thought him worthy of fuch a truft, he would undertake to furnish them at an easier rate, in conjunction with some of the leading men in Virginia and Maryland, land, with whom he faid he had already concerted meafures for that purpose.

The company were so much alarmed at these infinuations, that they declined complying with Mr M——'s demands, until the Abbe's return; and though they afterwards used all their endeavours to persuade him to be concerned with that little traitor in his undertaking, (by which he might still have been a very considerable gainer), he resisted all their solicitations, and plainly told them in the Abbe's presence, that he would never prostitute his own principles so far, as to enter into engagements of any kind with a person of his character, much less in a scheme that had a manifest tendency to lower the market-price of tobacco in England.

Thus ended a project the most extensive, simple, and eafy, and (as appeared by the trial made) the best calculated to raise an immense fortune, of any that was ever undertaken or planned by a private person; a project, in the execution of which, M- had the good of the public, and the glory of putting in a flourishing condition that valuable branch of our trade (which gives employment to two great provinces, and above two hundred fail of ships) much more at heart than his own private interest. It was reasonable to expect, that a man, whose debts M- had paid more than once, whom he had obliged in many other respects, and whom he had carried with him, at a very confiderable expence, on this expedition, merely with a view of bettering his fortune, would have acted with common honefty, if not with gratitude; but fuch was the depravity of this little monfter's heart, that on his death-bed he left a confiderable fortune to mere strangers, with whom he had little or no connection, without the least thought of refunding the money advanced for him by M-, in order to prevent his rotting in jail.

When M—— had once obtained a command of money, he, by his knowledge in several branches of trade, as well as by the affistence of some intelligent friends at Paris and London, found means to employ it to a very good purpose; and had he been a man of that selfish disposition which too much prevails in the world, he might have been at this day master of a very ample fortune; but his ear was never deaf to the voice of distress, nor his beneficent heart shut against the calamities of his fellow-creatures. He was even ingenious in contriving the most delicate methods of relieving modest indigence, and, by his industrious benevolence, often anticipated the requests of misery.

I could relate a number of examples to illustrate my offertions, in some of which you would perceive the most difinterested generosity; but such a detail would trespass too much upon your time, and I do not pretend to dwell upon every minute circumstance of his conduct. Let it suffice to say, that, upon the declaration of war with Spain, he gave up all his commercial schemes, and called in his money from all quarters, with a view of fitting down, for the rest of his life, contented with what he had got, and restraining his liberalities to what he could spare from his yearly income. This was a very prudential resolution, could he have kept it; but, upon the breaking out of the war, he could not without concern fee many gentleman of merit, who had been recommended to him, disappointed of commissions, merely for want of money to fatisfy the expectations of the commission-brokers of that time; and therefore launched out considerable sums for them on their bare notes, great part whereof was loft by the death of fome. in the unfortunate expedition to the West-Indies.

He, at length, after many other actions of the like nature, from motives of pure humanity, love of justice,

and

g

C

with

and abhorrence of oppression, embarked in a cause every way the most important that ever came under the discussion of the courts of law in these kingdoms; whether it be considered in relation to the extraordinary nature of the case, or the immense property of no less than sifty thousand pounds a year, and three peerages that depended upon it.

In the year 1740, the brave admiral, who at that time commanded his Majesty's fleet in the West-Indies, among the other transactions of his squadron, transmitted to the Duke of Newcastle, mentioned a young manwho, though in the capacity of a common failor on board one of the ships under his command, laid claim to the estate and titles of the Earl of A-.... These pretentions were no fooner communicated in the public papers, than they became the subject of conversation in all companies; and the person whom they chiefly affected, being alarmed at the appearance of a competitor, though at fuch distance, began to put himself in motion, and take all the precautions which he thought neceffary to defeat the endeavour of the young upftart. Indeed the early intelligence he received of Mr A --- y's making himfelf known in the West Indies, furnished him with numberiess advantages over that unhappy young gentleman; for, being in possession of a plentiful fortune, and lord of many manors in the neighbourhood of the very place where the claimant was born, he knew all the witnesses who could give the most material evidence of his legitimacy; and, if his probity did not restrain him, had, by his power and influence, sufficient opportunity and means of applying to the paffions and interefts of the witnesses, to filence many, and gain over others to his fide: while his competitor, by an absence of fifteen or fixteen years from his native country, the want of education and friends, together with his prefent helpless fituation, was rendered absolutely incapable of taking any step for his own advantage. And although his worthy uncle's confpicuous virtue and religious regard for justice and truth might possibly be an unconquerable restraint to his taking any undue advantages ; yet the consciences of that huge ar. my of emissaries he kept in pay, were not altogether fo very tender and fcrupulous. This much, however, may be faid, without derogation from, or impeachment of the noble Earl's nice virtue and honour, that he took care to compromise all differences with the other branches of the family, whole interftes were, in this affair, connected with his own, by tharing the estate with them, and also retained most of the eminent counsel within the bar of both kingdoms against this formidable bastard, before any suit was instituted by him.

While he was thus entrenching himself against the attack of a poor forlorn youth, at the distance of fisteen hundred leagues, continually exposed to the dangers of the sea, the war, and an unhealthy climate, Mr M—in the common course of conversation, chanced to ask some questions relating to this romantic pretender, of one H—, who was at that time the present lord A—y's chief agent. This man, when pressed, could not help owning that the late lord A—m actually left a son, who had been spirited away into America soon after his father's death, but said he did not know whether this was the same person.

This information could not fail to make an impression on the humanity of Mr M—, who, being acquainted with the genius of the wicked party who had possessed themselves of this unhappy young man's estate and honours, expressed no small anxiety and apprehension lest they should take him off by some means or other; and even then seemed disposed to contribute towards the

fupport

W

th

di

re

pri hii fupport of the friendless orphan, and to enquire more circumstantially into the nature of the claim. In the mean time, his occasions called him to France; and, during his absence, Mr A——y arrived in London, in the month of October 1741.

Here the clergyman was interrupted by Peregrine, who faid there was fomething so extraordinary, not to call it improbable, in the account he had heard of the young gentleman's being sent into exile, that he would look upon himself as infinitely obliged to the doctor, if he would favour him with a true representation of that transaction, as well as of the manner in which he arrived, and was known at the island of Jamaica.

The parson, in compliance with our hero's request; taking up the story from the beginning, " Mr A-y (faid he) is the fon of Arthur late Lord Baron of A-m, by his wife Mary Sh-d, natural daughter to John Duke of B and N-by, whom he publicly married on the 21st day of July 1706, contrary to the inclination of his mother and all his other relations, particularly of Arthur late Earl of A-y, who bore an implacable enmity to the Duke her father, and for that reason did all that lay in his power to traverse the marriage: but finding his endeavours ineffectual, he was so much offended, that he would never be perfectly reconciled to Lord A-n, though he was his prefumptive heir. After their nuptials, they cohabited together in England for the space of two or three years; during which she miscarried more than once : and he being a man of levity, and an axtravagant disposition, not only squandered away all that he had received of his wife's fortune, but also contracted many confiderable debts, which obilged him to make a precipitate retreat into Ireland, leaving his lady behind him in the house with his mother and fifter; who, having also been averse to the match, had always looked upon her with eyes of disgust.

It was not likely that harmony should long subfist in this family, especially as lady A-m was a woman of a lofty spirit, who could not tamely bear insults and ill-usage from persons, who, she had reason to believe, were her enemies at heart. Accordingly, a milunderflanding foon happened among them, which was fomented by the malice of one of her fifters-in-law: divers scandalous reports of her misconduct, to which the empty pretentions of a vain, wretched coxcomb (who was made use of as an infamous tool for that purpose) gave a colourable pretext, were trumped up, and tranfmitted, with many false and aggravating circumstances, to her husband in Ireland; who being a giddy unthinking man, was fo much incenfed at thefe infinuations, that, in the first transports of his passion, he sent to his mother a power of attorney, that she might sue for a divorce in his behalf. A libel was thereupon exhibited, containing many scandalous allegations, void of any real foundation in truth; but, being unsupported by any manner of proof, it was at length dismissed with cofts, after it had depended upwards of two years.

Lord A—m, finding himself abused by the misrepresentations of his mother and sister, discovered an inclination to be reconciled to his lady: in consequence of which, she was sent over to Dublin by her father, to the care of a gentleman in that city; in whose house she was received by her husband with all the demonstrations of love and esteem. From thence he conducted her to his lodgings, and then to his country house; where she had the missortune to suffer a miscarriage, through fear and resentment of my lord's behaviour, which was often brutal and indecent. From the country they removed to Dublin about the latter end of July, or beginning of August 1714; where they had not long continued, when her ladythip was known to be again with child.

Lord A-m and his iffue being next in remainder to the honours and estate of Arthur Earl of A---a, was extremely folicitous to have a fon; and, warned by the frequent miscarriages of his lady, resolved to curb the natural impatience and rufticity of his disposition, that she might not, as formerly, suffer by his outrageous conduct. He accordingly cherished her with uncommon tenderness and care; and her pregnancy being pretty far advanced, conducted her to his countryfeat, where she was delivered of Mr A ---- y, about the latter end of April, or beginning of May; for none of the witnesses have been able, at this distance, with absolute certainty, to fix the precise time of his birth, and there was no register kept in the parish: as an additional misfortune, no gentleman of fashion lived in that parish; nor did those who lived at any considerable distance care to cultivate an acquaintance with a man of Lord A --- m's strange conduct.

Be that as it will, the occasion was celebrated by his lordship's tenants and dependents upon the spot, and in the neighbouring town of New R—s, by bone-fires, illuminations, and other rejoicings; which have made such an impression upon the minds of the people, that in the place where they happened, and the contiguous parishes, several hundred persons have already declared their knowledge and remembrance of this event, in spite of the great power of the claimant's adversary in the quarter, and the great pains and indirect methods taken by his numberless agents and emissaries, as well as by those who are interested with him in the event of the suit, to corrupt and suppress the evidence.

Lord A ____m, after the birth of his fon, who was fent

of the country, (where people of the highest distinction put their children out to nurse into farm-houses and cabins) lived in harmony with his lady for the space of two years: but having, by his folly and extravagance, reduced himself to great difficulties, he demanded the remainder of her fortune from her father the Duke of B—, who absolutely resuled to part with a shilling until a proper settlement should be made on his daughter, which, by that time, he had put out of his own power, to make, by his folly and extravagence.

As her ladyship, by her endeavours to reform the economy of her house, had incurred the displeasure of fome idle, profligate fellows, who had fastened themfelves upon her husband, and helped to consume his fubflance, they seized this opportunity of the Duke's refusal; and, in order to be revenged upon the innocent lady, persuaded Lord A-m, that the only means of extracting money from his Grace would be, to turn her away on pretence of infidelity to his bed, for which, they hinted, there was but too much foundation. At their fuggestions, a most infamous plan was projected; in the execution of which, one P-, a poor, unbred, fimple country booby, whom they had decoyed into a fnare, lost one of his ears, and the injured lady retired that same day to New-R-s, where she continued several years. She did not, however, leave the house without struggling hard to carry her child along with her: but, far from enjoying such indulgence, strict orders were given, that the boy should not, for the future, be brought within her fight. This base inhuman treatment, instead of answering the end proposed, produced such a contrary effect, that the Duke of B-, by a codicil to his will, in which he reflects upon Lord A-m's evil temper, directed his executors to pay his daughter-

b

9

A

fo

ne

110

ed

he

acc

daughter an annuity of one hundred pounds while her Lord and she should continue to live separate; and this allowance was to cease on Lord A—m's death.

While she remained in this solitary situation the child was univerfally known and received as the legitimate fon and heir of her Lord, whose affection for the boy was fo conspicuous, that, in the midst of his own necessities, he never failed to maintain him in the dress and equipage of a young nobleman. In the course of his infancy, his father having often changed his place of refidence, the child was put under the instructions of a great many different schoolmasters, so that he was perfectly well known in a great many different parts of the kingdom; and his mother feized all opportunities (which were but rare, on account of his father's orders to the contrary) of feeing and giving him proofs of her maternal tenderness, until the fet out for England, after having been long in a declining state of health, by a paralytical diforder; upon the confequence of which, fuch dependence was placed by her inconfiderate hufband, who was by this time reduced to extreme poverty, that he actually married a woman whom he had long kept as a mistress. This creature no sooner un-derstood that Lady Al-m was departed from Ireland, than the openly avowed her marriage, and went about publicly with Lord Al-m, visiting his acquaintances in the character of his wife.

From this æra may be dated the beginning of Mr A—y's misfortunes. This artful woman, who had formerly treated the child with an appearance of fondness, in order to ingratiate herfelf with the father, now looking upon herfelf as fufficiently established in the family, thought it was high time to alter her behaviour with regard to the unfortunate boy; and accordingly, for obvious reasons, employed a thousand artifices to alienate the heart of the weak father from his unhappy offspring; yet, notwithstanding all her infinuations, nature still maintained her influence in his heart; and though the often found means to irritate him by artful and malicious accusations, his resentment never extended farther than fatherly correction. She would have found it impossible to accomplish his ruin, had not her efforts been reinforced by a new auxiliary, who was no other than his uncle, the present usurper of his title and estate; yet even this confederacy was overawed, in some measure, by the fear of alarming the unfortunate mother, until her distemper increased to a most deplorable degree of the dead palfy, and the death of her father had reduced her to a most forlorn and abject state of distress. Then they ventured upon the execution of their projects; and (though their aims were widely different) concurred in their endeavours to remove the hapless boy, as the common obflacle to both.

Vol. IV. O artifices

Lord Al-m, who (as I have already observed) was a man of weak intellects, and utterly void of any fixed principle of action, being by this time reduced to fuch a pitch of milery, that he was often obliged to pawn his wearing apparel, in order to procure the common necessaries of life; and having no other fund remaining with which he could relieve his present neceflities, except a fale of the reversion of the A-a estate, to which the non-age of his fon was an effectual bar, he was advised, by his virtuous brother and the reft of his counsellors, to surmount this difficulty, by fecreting his fon, and spreading a report of his death. This honest project he the more readily embraced, because he knew that no act of his could fruttrate the child's succession. Accordingly, the boy was removed from the school at which he was then boarded, to the house of one K -gh, an agent and accomplice of the present

fettled

present Earl of A—a, where he was kept for several months closely confined; and, in the mean time, it was industriously reported that he was dead.

This previous measure being taken, Lord A .____m published advertisements in the Gazettes, offering reversions of the A --- a estate to sale; and emissaries of various kinds were employed to inveigle fuch as were ignorant of the nature of the fettlement of thefe effates, or firangers to the affairs of his family. Some people, imposed upon by the report of the child's death, were drawn into purchase, thinking themselves safe in the concurrence of his lordship's brother, upon prefumption that he was next in remainder to the faccession; others, tempted by the smallness of the price, (which rarely exceeded half a year's purchase, as appears by many deeds) though they doubted the truth of the boy's being dead, ran small risks on the contingency of his dying before he should be of age, or in hope of his being prevailed upon to confirm the grants of his father; and many more were treating with him on the fame notions, when their transactions were suddenly interrupted, and the scheme of raising more money for the present defeated, by the unexpected appearance of the boy, who, being naturally sprightly, and impatient of restraint, had found means to break from his confinement, and wandered up and down the streets of Dublin, avoiding his father's house, and choosing to encounter all-forts of diffrefs, rather than subject himself again to the cruelty and malice of the woman who supplied his mother's place. Thus debarred his father's protection, and deftitute of any fixed habitation, he herded with all the loofe, idle, and diforderly youths in Dublin, skulking chiefly about the college, several members and students of which, taking pity on his misfortunes, supplied him at different times with clothes and money. In this un-and uncomfortable way of life did he remain, from the year 1725, to the latter end of November 1727; at which time his father died so miserably poor, that he was actually buried at the public expense.

0 2

This unfortunate nobleman was no sooner dead, than his brother Richard, now Earl of A-a, taking advantage of the non age and helples fituation of his nephew, feized upon all the papers of the defunct, and afterwards oforped the title of Lord A-m, to the furprise of the servants, and others who were acquainted with the affairs of the family. This usurpation, bold as it was, produced no other effect than that of his being insulted by the populace as he went through the streets, and the refusal of the king at arms to enrol the certificate of his brother's having died without iffue. The first of these inconveniences he bore without any sense of shame, though not without repining, conscious that it would gradually vanish with the novelty of his invasion; and as to the last, he conquered it by means well known and obvious.

Nor will it feem strange that he should thus invade the rights of an orphan with impunity, if people will consider, that the late Lord A-m had not only fquandered away his fortune with the most ridiculous extravagance, but also associated himself with low company, fo that he was little known, and less regarded by persons of any rank and figure in life; and his child, of confequence, debarred of the advantages which might have accrued from valuable connections. And though it was universally known that Lady A-m had a fon in Ireland, fuch was the obscurity in which the father had lived, during the last years of his life, that few of the nobility could be supposed to be acquainted with the particular circumstances of a transaction in which they had no concern, and which had happened at the distance of twelve years before the date of this usurpation; Moreover, as their first information was no other than common fame, the public clamour occasioned by the feparation, might inspire such as were strangers to the family-affairs, with a mistaken notion of the child's having been born about or after the time of that event. The hurry and bufile occasioned by the arrival of the Lord Lieutenant about this period, the reports induftriously propagated of the claimant's death, the obfcurity and concealment in which the boy was obliged to live, in order to elude the wicked attempts of his uncle, might also contribute to his peaceable enjoyment of an empty title : and, laftly, Lord Chancellor W-m, whose immediate province it was to iffue writs for Parliament, was an utter firanger in Ireland, unacquainted with the descents of families, and consequently did not examine farther than the certificate enrolled in the books of the king at arms. Over and above thefe circumstances, which naturally account for the success of the imposture, it may be observed, that the hapless youth had not one relation alive, on the fide of his father. whose interest it was not to forward or connive at his destruction; that his grandfather the Duke of Bwas dead; and that his mother was then in England, in a forlorn, destitute, dying condition, secreted from the world, and even from her own relations, by her woman Mary H ____ who had a particular interest to secrete her, and altogether dependent upon a miserable and precarious allowance from the Dutchess of B____, to whose caprice she was moreover a most wretched slave.

Notwithstanding these concurring circumstances in favour of the usurper, he did not think himself secure while the orphan had any chance of sinding a friend who would undertake his cause; and therefore laid a plan for his being kidnapped, and sent to America as a

Every thing being fettled with this auxiliary, feveral ruffians were employed in fearch of the unhappy victim; and the first attempt that was made upon him, in which his uncle personally assisted, happening near one of the great markets of the city of Dublin, an honest butcher, with the affiftance of his neighbours, rescued him by force from their cruel hands. This, however, was but a short respite; for (though, warned by this adventure, the boy feldom crept out of his lurking-places without the most cautious circumspection) he was, in March 1727, discovered by the diligence of his perfecutors, and forcibly dragged on board of a ship bound for Newcastle on Delaware river in America, where he was fold as a flave, and kept to hard labour, much above his age or firength, for the space of thirteen years, during which he was transferred from one person to another.

While he remained in this fervile fituation, he often mentioned to those in whom he thought such confidence might be placed, the circumstances of his birth and title, together with the manner of his being exiled from his native country; although, in this particular, he neglected a caution which he had received in his passage, importing, that such discovery would cost him his life. Meanwhile, the usurper quietly enjoyed his right; and to those who questioned him about his brother's son, constantly replied, that the boy had been dead for serveral veral years. And Arthur Earl of A ____ a dying in April 1737, he, upon pretence of being next heir, succeeded to the honours and estate of that nobleman.

The terms of the nephew's bondage, which had been lengthened out beyond the usual time, on account of his repeated attempts to escape, being expired in the year 1739, he hired himself as a common failor in a trading vessel bound to Jamaica; and there, being entered on board one of his Majesty's ships under the command of Admiral Vernon, openly declared his parentage and pretentions. This extraordinary claim, which made a great noise in the fleet, reaching the ears er's Irish wife, he believed the young gentleman to be. an impostor; and thinking it was incumbent on him to discover the cheat, he went on board of the ship to. which the claimant belonged, and having heard the account which he gave of himfelf, was, notwithstanding his prepossessions, convinced of the truth of what he alleged. On his return to his own thip, he chanced to mention this extraordinary affair upon the quarter-deck, in the hearing of Mr B ____n, one of the midshipmen, who had formerly been at school with Mr A-y. This young gentleman not only told the lieutenant that he had been school-fellow with Lord A-n's fon, but also declared that he should know him again, if not greatly altered, as he still retained a perfect idea of his countenance.

Upon this intimation the lieutenant proposed that the experiment should be tried; and went with the mid-shipman on board the ship that the claimant was in for that purpose. After all the sailors had been assembled upon deck, Mr B—n, casting his eyes around, immediately distinguished Mr A—y in the crowd, and laying his hand on his shoulder, "This is the man," faid he; affirming, at the fame time, that while he continued at school with him, the claimant was reputed and respected as Lord A—m's son and heir, and maintained in all respects suitable to the dignity of his rank. Nay, he was, in like manner, recognized by several other persons in the seet, who had known him in his infancy.

These things being reported to the Admiral, he generously ordered him to be supplied with necessaries, and treated like a gentleman; and, in his next dispatches, transmitted an account of the affair, to the Duke of Newcastle, among the other transactions of the fleet.

In September, or October 1741, Mr A—y arrived at London; and the first person to whom he applied for advice and assistance was a man of the law, nearly related to the samilies of A—a, and A—m, and well acquainted with the particular assairs of each; who, far from treating him as a bastard and impostor, received him with civility and seeming kindness, asked him to eat, presented him with a piece of money, and, excusing himself from meddling in the assair, advised him to go to Ireland, as the most proper place for commencing a suit for the recovery of his right.

Before the young gentleman had an opportunity, or indeed any inclination to comply with this advice, he was accidentally met in the street by that same H—n, who, as I have mentioned, gave Mr M—r the first insight into the affair: this man immediately knew the claimant, having been formerly an agent for his father, and afterwards a creature of his uncle's, with whom he was, not without reason, suspected to be concerned in kidnapping and transporting his nephew. Be that as it will, his connections with the usurper were now broke off by a quarrel, in consequence of which he had thrown up his agency; and he invited the hapless stranger to his house, with a view of making all possible advantage of such a guest.

There he had not long remained, when his treacherous landlord, tampering with his inexperience, effected a marriage between him and the daughter of one of his own friends who lodged in his house at the same time: but afterwards, feeing no person of consequence willing to espouse his cause, he looked upon him as an incumbrance, and wanted to rid his hands of him accordingly. He remembered that Mr M-r had expressed himfelf with all the humanity of apprehension in favour of the unfortunate young nobleman, before his arrival in England; and being well acquainted with the generofity of his disposition, he no sooner understood that he was returned from France, than he waited upon him with an account of Mr A-y's being fafely arrived. Mr M-r was fincerely rejoiced to find, that a person who had been fo cruelly injured, and undergone fo long and continued a scene of diffres, was restored to a country where he was fure of obtaining justice, and where every good man (as he imagined) would make the cause his own: and being informed that the youth was in want of necessaries, he gave twenty guineas to H-n for his use, and promised to do him all the fervice in his power; but had no intention to take upon himself the whole weight of such an important affair, or indeed to appear in the cause, until he thould be fully and thoroughly fatisfied that the claimant's pretenfions were well-founded.

In the mean time, H—n infinuating that the young gentleman was not lafe in his prefent lodging from the machinations of his enemies, M—r accommodated him with an apartment in his own house, where he was at great pains to remedy the defect in his education, by rendering him fit to appear as a gentleman in the world. Having received from him all the intelligence he could give relating to his own affair, he laid his case before counsel, and dispatched a person to Ireland to make further inquiries upon the same subject, who, on his first arrival in that kingdom, found the claimant's birth was as publicly known as any circumstance of that kind could possibly be at so great a distance of time.

The usurper and his friends gave all the interruption in their power to any researches concerning that affair; and had recourse to every art and expedient that could be invented, to prevent its being brought to a legal discussion: privilege, bills in chancery, orders of court surreptitiously and illegally obtained, and every other invention was made use of, to bar and prevent a fair and honest trial by jury. The usurper himself and his agents, at the same time that they formed divers conspiracies against his life, in vain endeavoured to detatch Mr M—r from the orphan's cause by innumerable artifices, infinuating, cajoling, and misrepresenting with surprising dexterity and perseverance.

His protector, far from being fatisfied with their reafons, was not only deaf to their remonstrances, but, believing him in danger from their repeated efforts, had him privately conveyed into the country, where an unhappy accident (which he hath ever fince fincerely regretted) furnished his adversary with a colourable pretext to cut him off in the beginning of his career.

A man happening to lose his life by the accidental discharge of a piece that chanced to be in the young gentleman's hands, the account of this misfortune no sooner reached the ears of his uncle, than he expressed the most immoderate joy at having found so good a handle for destroying him under colour of law. He immediately constituted himself prosecutor; set his emissaries faries at work, to fecure a coroner's inquest suited to his cruel purpoles; fet out for the place in person, to take care that the prisoner should not escape; insulted him in jail in the most inhuman manner; employed a whole army of attornies and agents to spirit up and carry on a most virulent prosecution; practifed all the unfair methods that could be invented, in order that the unhappy gentleman should be transported to Newgate. from the healthy prison to which he was at first committed; endeavoured to inveigle him into destructive confessions; and, not to mention other more infamous arts employed in the affair of evidence, attempted to fuprize him upon his trail, in the absence of his witnesses and counsel, contrary to a previous agreement with the profecutor's own attorney; nay, he even appeared in person upon the bench at the trail, in order to intimidate the evidence, and brow-beat the unfortunate prisoner at the bar; and expended above a thoufand pounds in that profecution. In spite of all his wicked efforts. however, which were defeated by the spirit and indefatigable industry of Mr M-r, the young gentleman was honourably acquitted, to the evident fatisfaction of all the impartial; the misfortune that gave a handle for that unnatural profecution, appearing to demonstration to have been a mere accident.

In a few months, his protector, who had now openly espoused his cause, (taking with him two gentlemen to witness his transactions), conducted him to his native country, with a view to be better informed of the strength of his pretensions, than he could be by the inthe intelligences he had hitherto received, or by the claimant's own dark and almost obliterated remembrance of the sacts which were essential to be known. Upon their arrival in Dublin, application was made to those persons persons whom Mr A ____ y had named as his schoolmasters and companions, together with the servants and neighbours of his father. These, though examined separately, without having the least previous intimation of what the claiment had reported, agreed in their ac. counts with him, as well as with one another, and mentioned many other people as acquainted with the fame facts, to whom Mr M -- r had recourse, and still met with the same unvaried information. By these means he made fuch progress in his inquiries, that in less than two months no fewer than one huudred perions, from different quarters of the kingdom, either personally, or by letters, communicated their knowledge of the claimant, in declarations confonant with one another, as well as with the accounts he gave himself. Several fervants who had lived with his father, and been deceived with the story of his death, fo industriously propagated by his uncle, no fooner heard of his being in Dublin, than they came from different parts of the country to fee him; and though great pains were taken to deceive them, they, nevertheless, knew him at first fight: fome of them fell upon their knees to thank heaven for his preservation, embraced his legs, and shed tears of joy for his return.

Although the conduct of his adversary, particularly in the above mentioned prosecution, together with the evidence that had already appeared, were sufficient to convince all mankind of the truth of the claimant's pretensions, Mr M——r, in order to be surther satisfied, resolved to see how he would be received upon the spot where he was born, justly concluding, that if he was really an impostor, the bastlard of a kitchen-wench, produced in a country entirely possessed by his enemy and his allies, he must be looked upon in that place with the utmost detestation and contempt.

This

ſe

pi

be

his

bei

the

to

bef

art

This his intention was no fooner known to the adverse party, than their agents and friends, from all quarters, repaired to that place with all possible dispatch, and used all their influence with the people, in remonfrances, threats, and all the other arts they could devife, not only to discountenance the claimant upon his arrival, but even to spirit up a mob to insult him. Notwithstanding these precautions, and the servile awe and subjection in which tenants are kept by their landlords in that part of the country, as foon as it was known that Mr A ---- y approached the town, the inhabitants crowded out in great multitudes to receive and welcome him, and accompanied him into town with acclamations and other expressions of joy, insomuch that the agents of his adversary durst not shew their faces. The foveregin of the corporation, who was a particular creature and favourite of the usurper, and whose all depended upon the iffue of the cause, was so conscious of the stranger's right, and so much awed by the behaviour of the people, who knew that consciousness, that he did not think it fafe even to preferve the appearance of neutrality upon this occasion, but actually held the stirrup while Mr A-y dismounted from his horfe.

This sense of conviction in the people, manifested itself still more powerfully, when he returned to the same piace in the year 1744, about which time lord A——a being informed of his resolution, determined again to be before-hand with him, and set out in person with his agents and friends, some of whom were detached before him, to prepare for his reception, and induced the people to meet him in a body, and accompany him to town, with such expressions of welcome as they had before bestowed on his nephew; but in spite of all their art and interest, he was suffered to pass through the
Vol. IV.

street in a mournful silence; and though several barrels of beer were produced to court the savour of the populace, they had no other effect than that of drawing their ridicule upon the donor; whereas, when Mr A—y, two days afterwards, appeared, all the inhabitants, with garlands, streamers, music, and other ensigns of joy, crowded out to meet him, and ushered him into town with such demonstrations of pleasure and good-will, that the noble peer found it convenient to hide himself from the resentment of his own tenants, the effects of which he must have severely felt, had not he been screened by the timely remonstrances of Mr M—r, and the other gentleman who accompanied his competitor.

Nor did his apprehension vanish with the transaction of this day; the town was again in an uproar on the Sunday following, when it was known that Mr A—y intended to come thither from Dunmain to church: they went out to meet him as before, and conducted him to the church-door with acclamations, which terrised his uncle to such a degree, that he fled with precipation in a boat, and soon after entirely quitted the place.

It would be almost an endless task to enumerate the particular steps that were taken by one side to promete, and by the other to delay the trial: the young gentleman's adversaries, sinding that they could not, by all the subtersuges and arts they had used, evade it, repeated attempts were made to assassinate him and his protector, and every obstruction thrown in the way of his cause, which crast could invent, villany execute, and undue influence confirm. But all these difficulties were surmounted by the vigilance, constancy, courage, and sagacity of M——r; and, at last, the affair was brought to a very solemn trial at bar, which being continued, by by feveral adjournments, from the eleventh to the 25th day of November, a verdict was found for the claimant, by a jury of gentlemen, which, in point of reputation and property, cannot be easily paralleled in the annals of that or any other country; a jury that could by no means be suspected of prepossessions in savour of Mr An—y, (to whose persons they were absolute strangers), especially if we consider, that a gentleman in their neighbourhood, who was nephew to the foreman, and nearly related to some of the rest of their number, sorfeited a considerable estate by their decision.

This verdict (faid the parson) gave the highest fatisfaction to all impartial persons that were within reach of being truly informed of their proceedings, and of the different genius and conduct of the parties engaged in the contest; but more especially to such as were in court (as I was) at the trial, and had an opportunity of observing the characters and behaviour of the persons who appeared there to give evidence .- To fuch it was very apparent, that all the witnesses produced there, on the part of the uncle, were either his tenants, dependents, pot-companions, or persons some way or other interested in the issue of the suit, and remarkable for a low kind of cunning; that many of them were persons of profligate lives, who deserved no credit; that (independent of the levity of their characters) those of them who went under the denomination of colonels, (colonel L-fts alone excepted, who had nothing to fay, and was only brought there in order to give credit to that party) made fo ridiculous a figure, and gave fo abfurd contradictory and inconfistent an evidence, as no court or jury could give the least degree of credit to. On the other hand, it was observed, that the nephew and Mr M-r his chief manager, (being absolute strangers in that country, and unacquainted with the characters of the persons they had to deal with) were obliged to lay before the court and jury such evidence as came to their hand, some of whom plainly appeared to have been put upon them by their adversaries, with a defign to hurt .- It was also manifest, that the witnesses produced for Mr A ---- y were fuch as could have no manner of connection with him, nor any dependence whatfoever upon him, to influence their evidence; for the far greatest part of them had never feen him from his infancy, till the trial began; and many of them (though poor, and undignified with the title of colonels) were people of unblemished character, of great simplicity, and fuch as no man in his fenses would pitch upon to support a bad cause .- It is plain that the jury (whose wellknown honour, impartiality, and penetration, must be revered by all who are acquainted with them) were not under the least difficulty about their verdict; for they were not inclosed above half an hour, when they returned with it .- These gentlemen could not help observing the great inequality of the parties engaged, the great advantages that the uncle had in every other respect (except the truth and justice of his case) over the nephew, by means of his vast possessions, and of his power and influence all round the place of his birth; nor could the contrast between the different geniuses of the two parties escape their observation .- They could not but see and conclude, that a person, who had confessedly transported and fold his orphan-nephew into flavery, who, on his return, had carried on fo unwarrantable and cruel a profecution to take away his life, under colour of law, and who had also given such glaring proofs of his skill and dexterity in the management of witnesses for that cruel purpose, was in like manner capable of exerting the fame happy talent on this occasion when his all was at stake; more especially, as he had so many others who were were equally interested with himself, and whose abilities, in that respect, sell nothing short of his own, to second him in it. The gentlemen of the jury had also a near view of the manner in which the witnesses delivered their testimonies, and had from thence an opportunity of observing many circumstances and distinguishing characteristics of truth and falsehood, from which a great deal could be gathered, that could not be adequately conveyed by any printed account, how exact soever; consequently, they must have been much better judges of the evidence on which they sounded their verdict, than any person who had not the same opportunity can possibly be.

These, Mr Pickle, were my restestions on what I had occasion to observe concerning that samous trial; and on my return to England, two years after, I could not help pitying the self-sussiciency of some people, who at this distance, pretended to pass their judgment on that verdict with as great positiveness, as if they had been in the secrets of the cause, or upon the jury who tried it; and that from no better authority than the declamations of Lord An—a's emissaries, and some falsified printed accounts artfully cooked up on purpose to missead and deceive.

But to return from this digression: lord A—a, the defendant in that cause, was so conscious of the strength and merits of his injured nephew's case, and that a verdict would go against him, that he ordered a writ of error to be made out before the trial was ended; and the verdict was no sooner given, than he immediately lodged it, though he well knew he had no manner of error to assign. This expedient was practised merely for vexation and delay, in order to keep Mr A—y from the possession of the small estate he had recovered by the verdict; that, his slender funds being exhausted, he might be deprived of other means to profecute his right; and, by the most oppressive contrivances and scandalous chicanery, it has been kept up to this day, without his being able to assign the least shadow of any error.

B

Lord A—a was not the only antagonist that Mr A—y had to deal with; all the different branches of the A—a family, who had been worrying one another at law ever fince the death of the late Earl of A—a, about the partition of his great estate, were now firmly united in an association against this unfortunate gentleman; mutual deeds were executed among them, by which many great lordship's and estates were given up by the uncle to persons who had no right to possess them, in order to engage them to side with him against his nephew, in withholding the unjust possession of the remainder.

These confederates having held feveral consultations against their common enemy, and finding that his cause gathered daily strength fince the trial, by the accession of many witnesses of figure and reputation, who had not been heard of before; and that the only chance they had to prevent the speedy establishment of his right, and their own destruction, was by stripping Mr M-r of the little money that yet remained, and stopping all farther resources whereby he might be enabled to proceed; they, therefore, came to a determined resolution to carry that hopeful scheme into execution; and, in pursuance thereof, they have left no expedient or stratagem, how extraordinary or facandalous foever, unpractised to distress Mr An-y and that gentleman. that end, all the oppressive arts and dilatory expensive contrivances that the fertile invention of the lowest pettifoggers of the law could possibly devise, have with great dexterity been played off against them, in fruitless

less quibbling, and malicious suits, entirely foreign to the merits of the cause. Not to mention numberless other acts of oppression, the most extraordinary and unprecedented proceedings, by means whereof this sham writ of error hath been kept on foot ever since November 1743, is to me (said the doctor) a most slagrant instance, not only of the prevalency of power and money, (when employed, as in the present case, against an unfortunate, helpless man, disabled, as he is, of the means of ascerting his right), but of the badness of a cause, that hath recourse to so many iniquitous expedients to Support it.

In a word, the whole conduct of Lord A-a and his party, from the beginning to this time, hath been fuch as fufficiently manifests, that it could proceed from no other motives than a consciousness of Mr A-y's right, and of their own illegal usurpations, and from a terror of trusting the merits of their case to a fair discussion by the laws of their country; and that the intention and main drift of all their proceedings plainly tends to stifle and smother the merits of the case from the knowledge of the world, by oppressive arts and ingenious delays, rather than trust it to the candid determination of an honest jury. What else could be the motives of kidnapping the claimant, and transporting him when an infant? of the various attempts made upon his life fince his return? of the attempts to divest him of all assistance to ascertain his right, by endavouring fo folicitously to prevail on Mr M-r to abandon him in the beginning? of retaining an army of counsel, before any fuit had been commenced? of the many finister attempts to prevent the trial at bar? of the various arts made use of to territy any one from appearing as witness for the claimant, and to seduce those who had appeared? of the shameless, unprecedented, low tricks tricks now practifed to keep him out of the possession of that estate for which he had obtained the verdict. thereby to disable him from bringing his cause to a farther hearing; and of the attempts made to buy up Mr M-r's debts, and to spirit up suits against him? Is it not obvious, from all these circumstances, as well as from the obstruction they had given to the attorneygeneral's proceeding to make a report to his Majesty on the claimant's petition to the king for the peerage, which was referred by his Majesty to that gentleman so far back as 1743, that all their efforts are bent to that one point, of stifling, rather than suffering the merits of this cause to come to a fair and candid hearing? and that the fole confideration at present between them and this unfortunate man, is not, whether he is right or wrong, but whether he shall or shall not find money to bring this cause to a final determination?

Lord A-a and his confederates, not thinking themselves safe with all these expedients, while there was a possibility of their antagonist's obtaining any affistance from such as humanity, compassion, generosity, or love of justice, might induce to lay open their purses to his assistance, in ascertaining his right, have, by themselves and their numeroues emissaries, employed all the arts of calumny, flander, and detraction against him, by traducing his cause, vilifying his person, and most basely and cruelly tearing his character to pices, by a thousand misrepresentations, purposely invented, and industriously propagated in all places of refort, which is a kind of cowardly affassination that there is no guarding against: yet, in spite of all these machinations, and the shameful indifference of mankind, who stand aloof unconcerned, and fee this unhappy gentleman most inhumanly oppressed by the weight of lawless power and faction, M-r, far from fuffering him elf to be dejected jected by the multiplying difficulties that crowd upon him, still exerts himself with amazing fortitude and assiduity, and will (I doubt not) bring the affair he began and carried on with so much spirit, while his senances lasted, to an happy conclusion.

It would exceed the bounds of my intention, and perhaps trespass too much upon your time, were I to enumerate the low artifices and shameful quibbles, by which the usurper has found means to procrastinate the decision of the contest between him and his hapless nephew, or to give a detail of the damage and perplexity which Mr M—r has sustained and been involved in by the treachery and ingratitude of some who listed themselves under him in the prosecution of this affair, and by the villany of others, who, under various pretences of material discoveries they had to make, &c. had sastened themselves upon him, and continued to do all the mischief in their power, until the cloven foot was detected.

One instance, however, is so slagrantly slagitious, that I cannot resist the inclination I feel to relate it, as an example of the most insernal persidy that perhaps ever entered the human heart. I have already mentioned the part which H—n acted in the beginning of M—r's connection with the unfortunate stranger, and hinted that the said H—n lay under many obligations to that gentleman, before Mr A—y's arrival in England. He had been chief agent to Lord A—y, and, as it afterwards appeared, received several payments of a secret pension which that lord enjoyed, for which he either could not, or would not account. His lordship, therefore, in order to compel him to it, took out writs against him, and his house was continually surrounded with catchpoles for the space of two whole years.

Mr M-r believing, from H-n's own account of the matter, that the poor man was greatly injured, and profecuted on account of his attachment to the unhappy young gentleman, did him all the good offices in his power, and became fecurity for him on feveral occasions; nay, such was his opinion of his integrity, that after Mr A—y was cleared of the profecution carried on against him by his uncle, his person was trusted to the care of this hypocrite, who desired that the young gentleman might lodge at his house for the convenience of air, M—r's own occasions calling him often into the country.

Having thus, by his confummate diffigulation, acquired fuch a valuable charge, he wrote a letter to one of Lord A --- y's attorneys offering to betray Mr An-ey, provided his lordship would settle his accompt, and give him a discharge for eight hundred pounds of the pension which he had received and not accounted for. Mr M-r, informed of this treacherous proposal, immediately removed his lodger from his house into his own, without assigning his reasons for fo doing, until he was obliged to declare it, in order to free himself from the importunities of Hin, who earnestly solicited his return. This miscreant finding himself detected and disappointed in his villanous defign, was fo much enraged at his miscarriage, that, forgetting all the benefits he had received from M-r for a feries of years, he practifed all the mischief that malice could contrive against him; and at length entered into a confedercy with one G-ft-y, and feveral other abandoned wretches, who, as before faid, under various pretences of being able to make material discoveries, and otherwise to serve the cause, had found means to be employed in some extra-business relating to it, though their real intention was to betray the claiment.

These confederates, in conjunction with some other auxiliaries of infamous characters, being informed that Mr M-r was on the point of fecuring a confiderable fum to enable him to profecute Mr An-y's right, and to bring it to a happy conclusion, contrived a deeplaid scheme to disappoint him in it, and at once to ruin the cause. And previous measures being taken for that wicked purpose, they imposed upon the young gentleman's inexperience and credulity, by infinuations equally false, plausible, and malicious; to which they at length gained his belief, by the mention of some cir. cumstances that gave what they alledged an air of probability, and even of truth. They swore that Mr M-r had taken out an action against him for a very large fum of money; that they had actually feen the writ; that the intention of it was to throw him into prison for life, and ruin his cause, in consequence of an agreement made by him with Lord A-ey, and his other enemies, to retrieve the money that he had laid out in his cause.

This plaufible tale was enforced with fuch an air of truth, candour, and earnest concern for his safety, and was strengthened by so many imprecations, and corroborating circumstances of their invention, as would have staggered one of much greater experience and knowledge of mankind than Mr A-ey could be fupposed to have at that time. The notion of perpetual imprisonment, and the certain ruin they made him believe his cause was threatened with, worked upon his imagination to such a degree, that he suffered himself to be led like a lamb to the flaughter by this artful band of villains, who fecreted him at the lodgings of one Pr-nt-ce, an intimate of G-ft-y's, for feveral days, under colour of his being hunted by bailiffs employed by Mr M --- r, where he was not only obliged by them them to change his name, but even his wife was not fuffered to have access to him.

B

Their defign was to have fold him, or drawn him into a ruinous compromise with his adversaries, for a valuable confideration to themselves. But as no ties are binding among such a knot of villains, the rest of the conspirators were jockied by G—st—ey, who, in order to monopolize the advantage to himself, hurried his prize into the country, and secreted him even from his confederates, in a place of concealment one hundred miles from London, under the same ridiculous pretence of M——r's having taken out a writ against him, and of bailiss being in pursuit of him every where round London.

He was no sooner there than G—st—ey, as a previous step to the other villany he intended, tricked him out of a bond for six thousand pounds, under colour of his having a person ready to advance the like sum upon it, as an immediate sund for carrying on the cause, assuring him, at the same time, that he had a set of gentlemen ready, who were willing to advance twenty-sive thousand pounds more for the same purpose, and to allow him sive hundred pounds a-year for his maintenance, till his cause should be made an end of, provided that Mr M——r should have no further concern with him or his cause.

Mr A—ey having, by this time, received some intimations of the deceit that had been put upon him, made answer, that he should look upon himself as a very ungrateful monster, indeed, if he deserted a person who had saved his life, and so generously ventured his own, together with his fortune, in his cause, until he should first be certain of the truth of what was alleged of him, and absolutely rejected the proposal. G—st—ey, who had no other view in making it, than to cover the

fecret

re

.

er

his

pro

ted

con

pour

of th

fecret villany he meditated against him, and to facilitate the execution thereof, easily receded from it, when he found Mr A—ey so averse to it, and undertook nevertheless to raise the money; adding, that he might, if he pleased, return to Mr M—r whenever it was secured. The whole drift of this pretended undertaking to raise the twenty five thousand pounds, was only to lay a foundation for a dextrous contrivance to draw Mr A—ey unwarily into the execution of a deed, relinquishing all his right and title, under a notion of its being a deed to secure the repayment of that sum.

G—st—ey having, as he imagined, so far paved the way for the execution of such a deed, enters into an agreement with an agent, employed for that purpose by Mr A—ey's adversaries, purporting, that in consideration of the payment of a bond for six thousand pounds, which he, G—st—ey, had, as he pretended, laid out in Mr A—ey's cause, and of an annuity of seven hundred pounds a-year, he was to procure for them from Mr A—ey a deed ready executed, relinquishing all right and title to the An—ey estate and honours. Every thing being prepared for the execution of this insernal scheme, unknown to Mr A—ey, G—st—ey then thought proper to send for him to town from his retirement, in order, as he pretended, to execute a security of twenty-sive thousand pounds.

This intended victim to that villain's avarice no fooner arrived in town, full of hopes of money to carry on his cause, and of agreeably surpring his friend and protector Mr M——r, with so seasonable and unexpected a reinforcement, than an unforeseen difficulty arose concerning the payment of G—st—ey's six thousand pound bond. That money was to have been raised out of the estate of a lunatic, which could not be done without leave of the Court of Chancery, to whom an account must have been given of the intended application of it.

3

While preparations were making to rectify this omission,

G—st—ey immediately carried Mr A—ey again into the country, lest he should happen to be undeceived by some means or other.

In the mean time, this wicked machination was providentially discovered by Mr M-r before it could be carried into execution, by means of the jealoufies that arose among the conspirators themselves; and was, at the same time, confirmed to him by a person whom the very agent for the An-ey party had intrust. ed with the fecret. M-r no fooner detected it, than he comunicated his discovery to one of Mr A-ey's counsel, a man of great worth; and immediately thereupon took proper measures to defeat it. He then found means to lay open to Mr A-ey himfelf, the treacherous scheme that was laid for his destruction; he was highly sensible of it; and could never afterwards reflect on the fnare that he had fo unwarily been drawn into, and had so narrowly escaped, without a mixture of horror, shame, and gratitude to his deliverer.

The confummate assurance of the monsters who were engaged in this plot, after they had been detected and upbraided with their treachery, is scarce to be paralleled; for they not only owned the fact of spiriting Mr A—y away in the manner above mentioned, but justified their doing it as tending to his service. They also maintained, that they had actually secured the twenty-five thousand pounds for him, though they never could name any one person who was to have advanced the money. No man was more active in this scheme than H—n, nor any man more solicitous to keep Mr

A---y

OL

W

ty

in

A ____ y up in the falle impressions he had received, or in projecting methods to ruin his protector, than he.

Among many other expedients for that purpole, 2 most malicious attempt was made to lodge an information against him, for treasonable practices, with the fecretary of state, notwithstanding the repeated proofs he had given of his loyalty; and as a preparatory step to his accusation, a letter, which this traitor dictated, was copied by another person, and actually fent to the Earl of C-d, importing, that the person who copied the letter, had an affair of consequence to communicate to his Lordship, if he would appoint a time for receiving the information. But that person, upon full conviction of the villany of the scheme, absolutely refused to proceed further in it, so that his malice once more proved abortive; and before he had time to execute any other contrivance of the same nature, he was imprisoned in this very jail for debt.

He was no fooner discharged, however, than he entered into fresh combinations with G-y and others, in order to thwart his deliverer in his schemes of rai-

e

R

fing money, and otherwise to distress and deprive him of liberty; for which purpose no art or industry (perjury not excepted) hath been spared. And, what is still more extraordinary, this perfidious monster having found money to take up the bond, in consequence of which he regained his freedom, hath procured a writ against M-r upon that very obligation; and taken affignments to some other debts of that gentleman, with the fame christian intention. But hitherto he hath, by his furprifing fagacity and unshaken resolution, baffled all their infernal contrivances, and retorted some of their machinations on their own heads. At this time, when he is supposed by some, and represented by others, as under the circumstances of oblivion and despondence, he proceeds in his defign with the utmost calmness and intrepidity, meditating schemes, and ripening measures, that will one day confound his enemies, and attract the notice and admiration of mankind."

Peregrine having thanked the priest for his obliging information, expressed his surprise at the scandalous inattention of the world to an affair of fuch importance; observing, that by such inhuman neglect, this unfortunate young gentleman Mr A-ey, was absolutely deprived of all the benefit of fociety; the fole end of which is, to protect the rights, redrefs the grievances, and promote the happiness of individuals. As for the character of M-r, he faid it was fo romantically fingular in all its circumstances, that though other motives were wanting, curiofity alone would induce him to feek his acquaintance : but he did not at all wonder at the ungrateful returns which had been made to his gene. rofity by H-n, and many others, whom he had ferved in a manner that few befides himfelf would have done; for he had been long convinced of the truth conveyed in these lines of a celebrated Italian author:

Li beneficii, che per la loro grandezza, non puonno effer guiderdonati, con la scelerata moneta dell' ingratituaine, sono pagati.

"The flory which you have related of that young gentleman (faid he), bears a very strong resemblance to the fate of a Spanish nobleman, as it was communicated to me by one of his own intimate friends at Paris. The Countefs d'Alvarez died immediately after the birth of a fon, and the hufband forviving her but three years, the child was left fole heir to his honours and estate, under the guardianship of his uncle, who had a small fortune, and a great many children. This inhuman relation, coveting the wealth of his infant ward, formed a defign against the life of the helpless orphan, and trusted the execution of it to his valet de chambre, who was tempted to undertake the murder by the promife of a confiderable reward. He accordingly stabbed the boy with a knife, in three different places on the right fide of his neck: but, as he was not used to such barbarous attempts, his hand failed in the performance; and he was feized with fuch remorfe, that, perceiving the wounds were not mortal, he carried the hapless vicatim to the house of a furgeon, by whose care they were healed; and, in the mean time, that he might not forfeit his recompence, found means to perfuade his employer that his orders were performed. A bundle being made up for the purpose, was publicly interred as the body of the child, who was faid to have been suddenly carried off by a convultion; and the uncle, without opposition, succeeded to his honours and estate. The boy being cured of his hurts, was, about the age of fix. delivered, with a small sum of money, to a merchant just embarking for Turkey; who was given to underfland, that he was the bastard of a man of quality, and 53 that:

that, for family reasons, it was necessary to conceal his birth.

While the unfortunate orphan remained in this deplorable flate of bondage, all the children of the usurper died one after another; and he himself being taken dangerously ill, attributed all his afflictions to the just judgment of God, and communicated his anxiety on that subject to the valet de chambre who had been employed in the murder of his nephew. That domestic. in order to quiet his mafter's conscience, and calm the perturbation of his spirits, confessed what he had done, and gave him hopes of still finding the boy by dint of industry and expence. The unhappy , child being the only hope of the family of Alvarez, the uncle immediately ordered a minute inquiry to be fet on foot; in confequence of which, he was informed that the orphan had been fold to a Turk, who had afterwards transferred him to an English merchant, by whom he was conveyed to London.

An express was immediately dispatched to this capital, where he understood that the unhappy exile had, in consideration of his faithful services, been bound apprentice to a French barber-surgeon; and, after he had sufficiently qualified himself in that profession, been received into the family of the count de Gallas, at that time the Emperor's embassador at the court of London. From the house of this nobleman he was traced into the service of the count d'Oberstoff, where he had married his lady's chamber-maid, and then gone to settle as a surgeon in Bohemia.

In the course of these inquiries, several years elapsed; his uncle, who was very much attached to the house of Austria, lived at Barcelona, when the father of this Empress Queen resided in that city, and lent him a very considerable sum of money in the most pressing emergency emergency of his affairs; and when that prince was on the point of returning to Germany, the old count, finding his end approaching, fent his father confessor to his Majesty, with a circumstantial account of the barbarity he had practised against his nephew, for which he implored forgiveness, and begged he would give orders that the orphan, when found, should inherit the dignities and fortune which he had unjustly usurped.

His Majesty assured the old man, that he might make himself easy on that score, and ordered the consessor to sollow him to Vienna, immediately after the count's death, in order to assist his endeavours in finding out the injured heir. The priest did not fail to yield obedience to this command: he informed himself of certain natural marks on the young count's body, which were known to the nurse and women who attended him in his infancy; and, with a gentleman whom the Emperor ordered to accompany him, set out for Bohemia, where he soon found the object of his inquiry, in the capacity of major-domo to a nobleman of that country, he having quitted his profession of surgery for that office.

He was not a little surprised, when he found himself circumstantially catechised about the particulars of his life, by persons commissioned for that purpose by the Emperor. He told them, that he was absolutely ignorant of his own birth, though he had been informed, during his residence in Turkey, that he was the bastard of a Spanish grandee, and gave them a minute detail of the pilgrimage he had undergone. This information agreeing with the intelligence which the priest had already received, and being corroborated by the marks upon his body, and the very scars of the wounds which had been inslicted upon him in his infancy, the confessor, without surther hesitation, saluted him by the name of Count d'Alvarez, grandee of Spain, and explained the whole mystery of his fortune.

If he was agreeably amazed at this explanation, the case was otherwise with his wife, who thought herself in great danger of being abandoned by an husband of fuch high rank; but he immediately dispelled her apprehension, by affuring her, that as she had shared in his adverfity, the should also partake of his good fortune. He set out immediately for Vienna, to make his acknowledgments to the Emperor, who favoured him with a very gracious reception; promifed to use his influence, fo that he might enjoy the honours and effate of his family; and, in the mean time, acknowledged himself his debtor for four hundred thousand floring. which he had borrowed from his uncle. He threw himself at the feet of his august protector, expressed the most grateful sense of his goodness, and begged he might be permitted to fettle in some of his Imperial Majeffy's dominions.

This request was immediately granted; he was allowed to purchase land in any part of the hereditary dominions of the house of Austria, to the amount of the sum I have mentioned; and made choice of the country of Ratibor in Silcaa, where, in all probability, he still resides."

of his present situation hindred him from making any advance that might be construed into forwardness or presumption.

CHAP. XCIX.

He is surprised with the appearance of Hatchway and Pipes, who take up their babitation in his neighbourhood, contrary to his inclination and express desire.

BEING now regularly initiated in the mysteries of the Fleet, and reconciled in some measure to the customs of the place, he began to bear the edge of restlection without wincing; and thinking it would be highly imprudent in him to defer any longer the purposes by which only he could enjoy any ease and satisfaction in his confinement, he resolved to resume his task of translating, and every week compose an occasional paper, by way of revenge upon the minister, against whom he had denounced eternal war. With this view he locked himself up in his chamber, and went to work with great cagerness and application; when he was interrupted by a ticket-porter, who, putting a letter in his hand, vanished in a moment, before he had time to peruse the contents.

Our hero, opening the billet, was not a little surprised to find a bank-note for fifty pounds, inclosed in a blank sheet of paper; and having exercised his memory and penetration on the subject of this unexpected windfall, had just concluded, that it could come from no other than the lady who had so kindly visited him a few days before, when his ears were suddenly invaded by the well-known sound of that whistle which always hung about the neck of Pipes, as a memorial of his former occupation. This tune being performed, he heard the noise of a wooden leg ascending the stair: upon which he opened his door, and beheld his friend Hatchway with his old ship-mate at his back.

before

After a cordial shake of the hand, with the usual salutation of "What cheer, cousin Pickle?" honest Jack seated himself without ceremony; and casting his eyes around the apartement, "Split my topstay-sail, (said he, with an arch sneer), you have got into a soug birth, cousin. Here you may sit all weathers, without being turned out to take your watch, and no fear of the ship's dragging her anchor. You ha'n't much room to spare, 'tis true: an' I had known as how you stowed so close, Tom should have slung my own hammock for you, and then you mought have knocked down this great lubberly hurricane house. But, mayhap, you turn in double, and so you don't chuse to trust yourself and your doxy to a clue and canvas."

Pickle bore his jokes with great good-humour, rallied him in his turn about the dairy maid at the garrison, inquired about his friends in the country, asked if he had been to visit his niece, and finally, expressed a defire of knowing the cause of his journey to London. The Lieutenant satisfied his curiosity in all these particulars; and, in answer to the last question, observed, that from the information of Pipes, understanding he was land-locked, he had come from the country in order to tow him into the offing. "I know not how the wind sits (said he); but if so be as three thousand pounds will bring you clear of the cape, say the word, and you shan't lie wind-bound another glass for want of the money."

This was an offer which few people in our hero's fituation would have altogether refused; especially as he had all the reason in the world to believe, that, far from being a vain, unmeaning compliment, it was the genuine tribute of friendship, which the Lieutenant would have willingly, ay, and with pleasure, paid. Nevertheless, Peregrine peremptorily refused his affiftance, though not without expressing himself in terms of acknowledgment fuitable to the occasion. him, it would be time enough to make use of his generofity, when he should find himself destitute of all other resource. Jack employed all his rhetoric, with a view of perfuading him to take this opportunity to procure his own enlargement; and finding his arguments ineffedual, infifted upon his accepting an immediate supply for his necessary occasions; fwearing, with great vehemence, that he would never return to the garrison unless he would put him upon the footing of any other tenant, and receive his rent accordingly.

Our young gentleman as positively swore, that he ncver would confider him in that light; remonstrating, that he had long ago fettled the house upon him for life, as a pledge of his own esteem, as well as in conformity with the Commodore's defire; and, befeeching him to return to his usual avocations, protested, that if ever his fituation should subject him to the necessity of borrowing from his friends, Mr Hatchway should be the first man to whom he would apply himself for fuccour. To convince him that this was not the cafe at present, he produced the bank-note, which he had received in the letter, together with his own ready money; and mentioned fome other funds which he invented extempore, in order to amuse the lieutenant's concern. In the close of this expostulation, he defired Pipes to conduct Mr Hatchway to the coffeehouse, where he might entertain himself with the newspapers for half an hour; during which he would put on his clothes, and bespeak something for dinner, that they might enjoy each other's company as long as his occasions would permit him to stay in that place.

₿

The two failors were no fooner gone, than he took up the pen, and wrote the following letter, in which he inclosed the bank-note, to his generous benefac-

trefs :

MADAM,

YOUR humanity is not more ingenious than my sufficion. In vain you attempt to impose upon me by an act of generosity which no person upon earth, but your ladyship, is capable of committing. Though your name was not subscribed on the paper, your sentiments were fully displayed in the contents, which I must beg leave to restore, with the same sense of gratitude, and for the same reasons I expressed, when I had the honour to converse with you upon this subject. Though I am deprived of my liberty by the villany and ingratitude of mankind, I am not yet destitute of the other conveniences of life; and therefore, beg to be excused for incurring an unnecessary addition to that load of obligation you have already laid upon—Madam,

Your ladyship's most devoted, Humble servant,

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

Having dreffed himself, and repaired to the place of appointment, he dispatched this epistle by the hands of Pipes, who was ordered to leave it at her ladyship's house, without staying for an answer; and, in the mean time, .

of

cu

en

wil

reg

lati

wal

dian

V

time, give directions for dinner, which he and his friend. Hatchway ate very cheerfully in his own apartment, after he had entertained him with the fight of all the curiofities in the place. During the repast, Jack repeated his kind offers to our adventurer, who declined them with his former obstinacy, and begged he might be no more importuned on that subject; but, if he insisted upon giving some fresh proofs of his friendship, he might have an opportunity of exhibiting it in taking Pipes under his care and protection; for nothing affected him so much as his inability to provide for such a faithful adherent.

The lieutenant defired he would give himself no trouble upon that score, he being, of his own accord, persectly well disposed to befriend his old ship-mate, who should never want, while he had a shilling to spare. But he began to drop some hints of an intention to six his quarters in the Fleet, observing, that the air seemed to be very good in that place, and that he was tired of living in the country. What he said, did not amount to a plain declaration, and therefore, Peregrine did not answer it as such, though he perceived his drift; and took an opportunity of describing the inconveniences of the place, in such a manner, as, he hoped, would deter him from putting such an extravagant plan in execution.

This expedient, however, far from answering the end proposed, had a quite contrary effect, and furnished Hatchway with an argument against his own unwillingness to quit such a disagreeable place. In all probability, Jack would have been more explicit, with regard to the scheme he had proposed, if the conversation had not been interrupted by the arrival of Cadwallader, who never failed in the performance of his diurnal visit. Hatchway, conjecturing that this stranger Vol. IV.

might have some private business with his friend, quitted the apartment, on pretence of taking a turn; and meeting Pipes at the door, desired his company to the Bare, by which name the open space is distinguished; where, during a course of perambulation, these two companions held a counsel upon Pickle; in consequence of which, it was determined, since he obstinately persisted to resuse their assistance, that they should take lodgings in his neighbourhood, with a view of being at hand to minister unto his occasions, in spite of his false delicacy, according to the emergency of his assairs.

This resolution being taken, they consulted the barkeeper of the coffee-house about lodging, and she directed them to the warden; to whom the lieutenant, in his great wisdom, represented himself as a kinsman to Peregrine, who, rather than leave that young gentleman by himself to the unavoidable discomforts of a prison, was inclined to keep him company till such time as his affairs could be put in order. This measure he the more anxiously defired to take, because the prisoner was sometimes subject to a disordered imagination, upon which occasion he stood in need of extraordinary attendance; and therefore, he (the lieutenant)intreated the warden to accommodate him with a lodging for himfelf and his fervant, for which he was ready to make any reasonable acknowledgment. den, who was a fensible and humane man, could not help applauding his resolution; and several rooms being at that time unoccupied, he put him immediately in possession of a couple, which were forthwith prepared for his reception.

This affair being fettled to his fatisfaction, he dispatched Pipes for his portmanteau; and returning to the coffee-house, found Peregrine, with whom he spent the remaining part of the evening. Our hero, taking it for granted that he proposed to set out for the garrifon next day, wrote a memorand in of some books which he had lest in that habitation, and which he now desired Jack to send up to town by the waggon, directed for Mr Crabtree. He cautioned him against giving the least hint of his missortune in the neighbourhood, that it might remain as long as possible concealed from the knowledge of his sister, (who, he knew, would asslict herself immoderately at the news) nor reach the ears of the rest of the family, who would exult and trip
umph over his distress.

Hatchway listened to his injunctions with great attention, and promifed to demean himfelf accordingly: then the discourse shifted to an agreeable recapitulation of the merry scenes they had formerly acted together; and the evening being pretty far advanced, Peregrine, with feeming reluctance, told him, that the gates of the Fleet would in a few minutes be shut for the night, and that there was an absolute necessity for withdrawing to his lodging. Jack replied, that he could not think of parting with him fo foon, after fuch a long separation, and that he was determined to flay with him an hour or two longer, if he should be obliged to take up his lodging in the streets. Pickle, rather than disoblige his guest, indulged him in his defire, and resolved to give him a share of his own bed. A pair of chickens and 'sparagus were bespoken for supper, at which Pipes attended with an air of internal satisfaction; and the bottle was bandied about in a jovial manner till midnight, when the Lieutenant rose up and took his leave, observing, that being fatigued with riding, he was inclined to turn in. Pipes, upon this intimation, produced a lantern ready lighted, and Jack, shaking his entertainer by the hand, wished, him good-night, T 2 and promised to visit him again betimes in the morn-

Peregrine, imagining that his behaviour proceeded from the wine, which he had plentifully drank, told him, that if he was disposed to sleep, his bed was ready prepared in the room, and ordered his attendant to undress his master; upon which Mr Hatchway gave him to understand, that he had no occasion to incommode his friend, having already provided a lodging for himfelf; and the young gentleman demanding an explanation, he frankly owned what he had done, faying, "You gave me such a dismal account of the place, that I could not think of leaving you in it without company." Our young gentleman, who was naturally impatient of benefits, and forefaw that this uncommon inflance of Hatchway's friendship would encroach upon the plan which he had formed for his own subfitance, by engroffing his time and attention, so as that he should not be able to prosecute his labours, closetted the Lieutenant next day, and demonstrated to him the folly and ill consequences of the step he had taken. He obferved, that the world in general would look upon it as the effect of mere madness; and, if his relations were fo disposed, they might make it the foundation for a statute of lunacy against him : that his absence from the garrison must be a very great detriment to his private affairs; and, laftly, that his presence in the Fleet would be a very great hindrance to Pickle himself, whose hope of regaining his liberty altogether depended upon his being detached from all company and interruption.

To these remonstrances Jack replied, that, as to the opinion of the world, it was no more to him than a rotten ratline; and if his relations had a mind to have his upper works condemned, he did not doubt but he should should be able to fland the furvey, without being declared unfit for fervice; that he had no affairs at the garrison but such as would keep cold; and with regard to Pickle's being interrupted by his presence, he gave him his word, that he would never come along fide of him, except when he should give him the fignal for holding discourse. In conclusion, he fignified his resolution to stay where he was, at all events, without making himself accountable to any person whatsoever.

Peregrine seeing him determined, defisted from any further importunity; refolving, however, to tire him out of his plan, by referve and supercilious neglect; for he could not bear the thought of being fo notoriously disobliged by any person upon earth. With this view, he quitted the Lieutenant, upon some flight pretence, after having told him that he could not have the pleafure of his company at dinner, because he was engaged with a particular club of his fellow-prisoners.

Jack was a stranger to the punctilios of behaviour, ... and therefore did not take this declaration amis, but had immediate recourse to the advice of his counsellor Mr Pipes, who proposed that he should go to the coffeehouse and kitchen, and give the people to understand that he would pay for all fuch liquor and provisions as Mr Pickle should order to be fent to his own lodging. This expedient was immediately practifed; and, as there was no credit in the place, Hatchway deposited a fum of money by way of fecurity, to the cook and the vintner, intimating, that there was a necessity of taking that method of befriending his cousin Peregrine, who was subject to strange whims that rendered it impossible to ferve him any other way.

In confequence of these infinuations, it was that same day rumoured about the Fleet, that Mr Pickle was an unhappy gentleman disordered in his understanding; and that the Lieutenant was his near relation, who had subjected himself to the inconvenience of living in a jail, with the sole view of keeping a strict eye over his conduct. This report, however, did not reach the ears of our hero till the next day, when he sent one of the runners of the Fleet, who attended him, to be speak and pay for a couple of pullets, and something else for dinner, to which he had already invited his friend Hatchway, in hope of being able to persuade him to retire into the country, after he had undergone a whole day's mortification in the place. The messenger returned with an assurance that the dinner should be made ready according to his directions, and restored the money, observing that his kinsman had paid for what was bespoke.

Peregrine was equally surprised and disgusted at this information, and resolved to chide the lieutenant severely for his unseasonable treat, which he considered as a thing repugnant to his reputation. Meanwhile, he difpatched his attendant for wine to the coffee-house, and finding his credit bolfered up in that place by the same means, was enraged at the presumption of Jack's friendship. He questioned the valet about it with such manifestation of displeasure, that the fellow, afraid of disobliging fuch a good master, frankly communicated the flory which was circulated at his expence. The young gentleman was fo much incenfed at this piece of intelligence, that he wrote a bitter expostulation to the lieutenant, wherein he not only retracted his invitation, but declared that he would never converse with him while he should remain within the place.

Having thus obeyed the dictates of his anger, he gave notice to the cook, that he should not have occafion for what was ordered. Repairing to the coffeehouse, he told the landlord, that whereas he understood the stranger with the wooden leg had prepossessed him and others with ridiculous notions, tending to bring the sanity of his intellects in question, and, to confirm this imputation, had, under the pretence of consanguinity, undertaken to defray his expences, he could not help (in justice to himself) declaring, that the same person was, in reality, the madman, who had given his keepers the slip; that, therefore, he (the landlord) would not find his account in complying with his orders, and encouraging him to frequent his house; and that, for his own part, he would never enter the door, or favour him with the least triste of his custom, if ever he should for the future find himself anticipated in his payments by that unhappy lunatic.

The vintner was confounded at this retorted charge: and, after much perplexity and deliberation, concluded, that both parties were distracted; the stranger in paying a man's debts against his will, and Pickle, in being offended at such forwardness of friendship.

CHAP. C.

These associates commit an assault upon Crabtree, for which they are banished from the Fleet. Peregrine begins to feel the effects of confinement.

OUR adventurer having dined at an ordinary, and in the afternoon retired to his own apartment, as usual, with his friend Cadwallader; Hatchway and his affociate, after they had been obliged to discuss the provision for which they had paid renewed their conference upon the old subject. Pipes giving his mess-mate to understand, that Peregrine's chief confident was the old deaf bachelor, whom he had feen at his lodging the preceding day. Mr Hatchway, in his great penetration, discovered, that the young gentleman's obstinacy proceeded from the advice of the mifanthrope, whom, for that reason, it was their business to chastise. Pipes entered into this opinion the more willingly, as he had all along believed the fenior to be a fort of wizzard, or fome cacodæmon, whom it was not very creditable to be acquainted with. Indeed, he had been inspired with this notion by the infinuations of Hadgi, who had formerly dropped some hints touching Crabtree's profound knowledge in the magic art: mentioning, in particular, his being possessed of the philosopher's stone; an affertion to which Tom had given implicit credit, until his mafter was fent to prison for debt, when he could no longer suppose Cadwallader lord of fuch a valuable fecret, or else he would have certainly procured the enlargement of his most intimate friend.

With these sentiments he espoused the resentment of Hatchway. They determined to seize the supposed conjurer with the first opportunity on his return from his visit to Peregrine, and without hesitation exercise upon him the discipline of the pump. This plan they would have executed that same evening, had not the misanthrope luckily withdrawn himself by accident before it was dark, and even before they had intelligence of his retreat. But next day they kept themselves upon the watch 'till he appeared, and Pipes lifting his hat as Crabtree passed, "O damn ye, old Dunny, (said he), you and I must grapple by and by; and e'gad I shall lie so near your quarter, that your ear-ports will let in the sound, tho's they are double calked with oakhum."

The misanthrope's ears were not quite so fast closed, but that they received this intimation; which, though delivered delivered in terms that he did not understand, had such an effect upon his apprehension, that he signified his doubts to Peregrine, observing, that he did not much like the looks of that same rushan with the wooden leg. Pickle assured him, he had nothing to fear from the two sailors, who could have no cause of resentment against him; or, if they had, would not venture to take any step which they knew must block up all the avenues to that reconcilement about which they were so anxious; and moreover, give such offence to the governor of the place, as would infallibly induce him to expel them both from his territories.

Notwithstanding this affurance, the young gentleman was not so confident of the lieutenant's discretion, as to believe that Crabtree's fears were altogether without foundation; he forthwith conjectured that Jack had taken umbrage at an intimacy, from which he found himfelf excluded, and imputed his difgrace to the infinuations of Cadwallader, whom, in all likelihood, he intended to punish for his supposed advice. He knew his friend could fustain no great damage from the lieutenant's refentment in a place which he could immediately alarm with his cries, and therefore wished he might fall into the fnare, because it would furnish him with a pretence of complaint; in confequence of which, the failors would be obliged to shift their quarters, so as that he should be rid of their company, in which he at prefent could find no enjoyment.

Every thing happened as he had foreseen; the misanthrope, in his retreat from Peregrine's chamber, was affaulted by Hatchway and his affociate, who seized him by the collar without ceremony, and began to drag him towards the pump, at which they would have certainly complimented him with a very disagreeable bath, had not he exalted his voice in such a manner, as in a moment brought a number of the inhabitants, and Pickle himself, to his aid. The assailants would have persisted in their design, had the opposition been such as they could have faced with any possibility of success: nor did they quit their prey before a dozen at least had come to his rescue, and Peregrine, with a menacing aspect and air of authority, commanded his old valet to withdraw: then they thought proper to sheer off, and betake themselves to close quarters, while our hero accompanied the affrighted Cadwallader to the gate, and exhibted to the warden a formal complaint against the rioters, upon whom he retorted the charge of lunacy, which was supported by the evidence of twenty persons, who had been eye-witnesses of the outrage committed against the old gentleman.

The governor, in consequence of this information, sent a message to Mr Hatchway, warning him to move his lodging next day, on pain of being expelled. The lieutenant, contumaciously refusing to comply with this intimation, was in the morning, while he amused himself in walking upon the Bare, suddenly surrounded by the constables of the court, who took him and his adherent prisoners before they were aware, and delivered them into the hands of the turnkeys, by whom they were immediately dismissed, and their baggage conveyed to the side of the ditch

This expulsion was not performed without an obstinate opposition on the part of the delinquents, who, had they not been surprised, would have set the whole Fleet at desiance, and, in all probability, have acted divers tragedies before they could have been overpowered.
Things being circumstanced as they were, the lieutenant did not part with his conductor, without tweaking his nose by way of sarewell; and Pipes, in imitation of such a laudable example, communicated a token of remembrance, membrance, in an application to the fole eye of his attendant, who, fcorning to be outdone in this kind of courtefy, returned the compliment with fuch good will that Tom's organ performed the office of a multiplying glass. These were mutual hints for stripping; and accordingly each was naked from the waift upwards in a trice. A ring of butchers from the market was immediately formed; a couple of the reverend Flamens, who, in morning gowns, ply for marriages in that quarter of the town, constituted themselves seconds and umpires of the approaching contest, and the battle began without farther preparation. The combatants were, in point of firength and agility, pretty equally matched; but the jailor had been regularly trained to the art of bruifing: he had more than once fignalized himself in public, by his prowefs and skill in this exercise, and lost one eye upon the stage in the course of his exploits. This was a misfortune of which Pipes did not fail to take the advantage : he had already fustained feveral hard knocks upon his temples and jaws, and found it impracticable to fmite his antagonist upon the victualling-office, fo dexteroully was it defended against affault. He then changed his battery, and being ambidexter, raifed fuch a clatter upon the turnkey's blind fide, that this hero, believing him left-handed, converted his attention that way, and opposed the unenlightened fide of his face to the right hand of Pipes, which being thus unprovided against, slily bestowed upon him a peg under the fifth rib, that in an inftant laid him fenfeless on the pavement, at the feet of his conqueror. Pipes was congratulated upon his victory, not only by his friend Hatchway, but also by all the by-standers, particularly the priest who had espoused his cause, and now invited the strangers to his lodging in a neighbouring ale-house, where they were entertained so much to their their liking, that they determined to feek no other habitation while they should continue in town: and notwithstanding the disgrace and discouragement they had met with in their endeavours to serve our adventurer, they were still resolved to persevere in their good offices, or, in the vulgar phrase, to see him out.

While they settled themselves in this manner, and acquired samiliar connections round all the purlieus of the ditch, Peregrine sound himself deprived of the company of Cadwallader, who signified by letter, that he did not choose to hazard his person again in visiting him, while such assassins occupied the avenues through which he must pass; for he had been at pains to enquire into the motions of the seamen, and informed himself exactly of the harbour in which they were moored.

Our hero had been fo much accustomed to the conversation of Crabtree, which was altogether suitable to the fingularity of his own disposition, that he could very ill afford to be debarred of it at this juncture, when almost every other source of enjoyment was stopped. He was, however, obliged to submit to the hardships of his fituation; and as the characters of his fellow-prisoners did not at all improve upon him, he was compelled to feek for fatisfaction within himfelf. Not but that he had an opportunity of converfing with some people, who neither wanted fense, nor were deficient in point of principle; yet there appeared in the behaviour of them all, without exception, a certain want of decorum, a squalor of sentiment, a fort of jailish cast contracted in the course of confinement, which disgusted the delicacy of our hero's observation. He, therefore, detached himself from their parties as much as he could, without giving offence to those among whom he was obliged to live, and refumed his labours with incredible eagernels and perseverance, his spirits being supported by the fuccels fucces of some severe Philippics, which he occasionally published against the author of his missortune.

Nor was his humanity unemployed in the vacations of his revenge: a man must be void of all sympathy and compassion, who can reside among so many miserable objects, without feeling an inclination to relieve their diffress. Every day almost presented to his view such lamentable scenes, as were most likely to attract his notice, and engage his benevolence. Reverfes of fortune, attended with the most deplorable circumstances of domestic wo, were continually intruding upon his acquaintance; his ears were invaded with the cries of the hapless wife, who, from the enjoyment of affluence and pleasure, was forced to follow her husband to this abode of wretchedness and want; his eyes were every minute affailed with the naked and meagre appearances of hunger and cold; and his fancy teemed with a thousand agravations of their mifery.

Thus fituated, his purfe was never shut while his heart remained open. Without reflecting upon the flen. derness of his store, he exercised his charity to all the children of diffress, and acquired a popularity, which, though pleasing, was far from being profitable. fhort, his bounty kept no pace with his circumstances, and in a little time he was utterly exhausted. He had recourse to his bookseller, from whom, with great difficulty, he obtained a fmall reinforcement; and immediately relapfed into the same want of retention. He was conscious of his infirmity, and found it incurable: he forefaw, that by his own industry he should never be able to defray the expence of these occasions; and this reflection funk deep into his mind. The approbation of the public, which he had earned or might acquire, like a cordial often repeated, began to lofe its effect upon his imagination; his health suffered by his sedentary life and austere application; his eye-sight failed, his appetite forsook him, his spirits decayed; so that he became melancholy, listless, and altogether incapable of prosecuting the only means he had lest for his subsistence; and (what did not at all contribute to the alleviation of these particulars), he was given to understand by his lawyer, that he had lost his cause, and was condemned in costs. Even this was not the most mortifying piece of intelligence he received; he at the same time learned that his bookseller was bankrupt, and his friend Crabtree at the point of death.

These were comfortable considerations to a youth of Peregrine's disposition, which was so capricious, that the more his mifery increased, the more haughty and inflexible he became. Rather than be beholden to Hatchway, who flill hovered about the gate, eager for an opportunity to affift him, he chose to undergo the want of almost every convenience of life, and actually pledged his wearing apparel to an Irish pawn-broker in the Fleet, for money to purchase those things without which he must have absolutely perished. He was gradually irritated by his misfortunes into a rancorous resentment against mankind in general, and his heart so alienated from the enjoyments of life, that he did not care how foon he quitted his miserable existence. Tho' he had shocking examples of the vicisfitudes of fortune continually before his eyes, he could never be reconciled to the idea of living, like his fellow-fufferers, in the most abject degree of dependence. If he refused to accept of favours from his own allies and intimate friends, whom he had formerly obliged, it is not to be supposed that he would liften to proposals of that kind from any of his fellow-prisoners, with whom he had contracted acquaintance : he was even more eautious than ever of incurring obligations; he now shunned his former mess-mates, in order to avoid disagreeable tenders of friendship. Imagining that he perceived an inclination in the clergyman to learn the state of his sinances, he discouraged and declined the expalnation, and at length secluded himself from all society.

former

CHAP. CI.

He receives an unexpected vifit; and the clouds of miffortune begin to separate.

TATHILE he pined in this forlorn condition, with an equal abhorrence of the world and himfelf, Cap. tain Gauntlet arrived in town, in order to promote his interest for promotion in the army; and, in confequence of his wife's particular defire, made it his bufiness to inquire for Peregrine, to whom he longed to be reconciled, even though at the expence of a flight fubmiffion. But he could hear no tidings of him at the place to which he was directed; and, on the supposition that our hero had gone to refide in the country, applied himfelf to his own bufiness, with intention to renew his inquiries after that affair should be transacted. He communicated his demands to his supposed patron, who had assumed the merit of making him a captain, and been gratified with a valuable prefent on that confideration, and was cajoled with hopes of fucceeding in his present aim by the same interest.

Meanwhile, he became acquainted with one of the clerks belonging to the war-office, whose advice and affifiance, he was told, would be a furtherance to his sentleman upon the circumstances of his expectation, he learned, that the nobleman upon whom he depended was a person of no consequence in the state, and altogether incapable of assisting him in his advancement. At the same time, his counsellor expressed his surprize that Captain Gauntlet did not rather interest in his cause the noble peer to whose good offices he owed his last commission.

This remark introduced an explanation, by which Godfrey discovered, to his infinite assonishment, the mistake in which he had continued so long with regard to his patron; though he could not divine the motive which induced a nobleman, with whom he had no acquaintance or connection, to interpose his influence in his behalf. Whatsoever that might be, he thought it was his duty to make his acknowledgement; and, for that purpose, went next morning to his house, where he was politely received, and given to understand, that Mr Pickle was the person to whose friendship he was indebted for his last promotion.

Inexpressible were the transports of gratitude, affection and remorfe, that took possession of the soul of Gauntlet when this mystery was unfolded. "Good heaven! (cried he, listing up his hand) have I lived so long in a state of animosity with my benefactor? I intended to have reconciled myself to him, at any rate, before I was sensible of this obligation; but now I shall not enjoy a moment's quiet until I have an opportunity of expressing to him my sense of his heroic friendship. I presuare, from the nature of the favour conferred upon him, in my behalf, that Mr Pickle is well known to your lordship; and I should think myself extremely happy, if you could inform me in what part of the country he is to be found; for the person with whom

Le lodged, some time ago, could give me no intelligence of his motions."

The nobleman, touched with this inflance of generous felf-de nial in Peregrine, as well as with the fensibility of his friend, lamented the unhappiness of our hero, while he gave Gauntlet to understand, that he had been long disordered in his intellects, in consequence of having squandered away his fortune; and that his creditors had thrown him into the Fleet prison; but whether he fill continued in that confinement, or was releafed from his misfortunes by death, his lordship did not know, because he had never inquired.

Godfrey no fooner received this intimation, than (his blood boiling with grief and impatience) he craved pardon for his abrupt departure; then quitting his in. former on the inflant, reimbarked in his backney-coach, and ordered himself to be conveyed directly to the Fleet. As the vehicle proceeded along one fide of the market, he was surprised with the appearance of Hatchway and Pipes, who flood cheapening collyflowers at a green-fall, their heads being cafed in worsted nightcaps, half covered with their hats, and a short tobaccopipe in the mouth of each. He was rejoiced at fight of the two feamen, which he took for an happy omen of finding his friend: and ordering the coachman to ftop the carriage, called the lieutenant by his name. Jack replying with an Hilloah, looking behind him, and recognizing the face of his old acquaintence, ran up to the coach with great eagerness. Shaking the captain heartily by the hand, "Odd's heart! (faid he) I am glad thou halt fallen in with us; we shall now be able . to find the trim of the veffel, and lay her about on t'o. . ther tack. For my own part, I have had many a confort in my time, that is, in the way of good fellowship. and I always made shift to ware 'em at one time or another; but this headstrong toad will neither obey the helm nor the sheet; and, for aught I know, will founder where he lies at anchor.

Gauntlet, who conceived part of his meaning, alighted immediately; and being conducted to the failor's lodging, was informed of every thing that had passed between the lieutenant and Pickle. He, in his turn, communicated to Jack the discovery which he had made, with regard to his commission; at which the other gave no signs of surprise; but, taking the pipe from his mouth, "Why, look ye, captain (said he), that's not the only good turn you have owed him. That same money you received from the Commodore, as an old debt, was all a sham, contrived by Pickle for your service; but a' wool drive under his bare poles, without sails or rigging, or a mess of provision on board, rather than take the same assistance from another man."

Godfrey was not only amazed, but chagrined at the knowledge of this anecdote; which gave umbrage to his pride, while it stimulated his defire of doing something in return for the obligation. He inquired into the present circumstances of the prisoner: and understanding that he was indisposed, and but indifferently provided with the common necessaries of life, though still deaf to all offers of affistance, began to be extremely concerned at the account of his favage obflinacy and pride, which would, he feared, exclude him from the privilege of relieving him in his distress. However, he resolved to leave no expedient untried that might have any tendency to furmount fuch destructive prejudice; and, entering the jail, was directed to the apartment of the wretched prisoner. He knocked softly at the door, and when it was opened, flarted back with horror and aftonishment; the figure that presented itself to his view, was the remains of his once happy friend, but so miserably altered and disguised, that his features were scarce cognizable. The florid, the sprightly, the gay, the elevated youth, was now metamorphosed into a wan, dejected, meagre, squalid fpectre; the hollow-eyed representative of diftemper, indigence, and despair: yet his eyes retained a certain ferocity, which threw a dismal gleam athwart the cloudiness of his aspect, and he, in silence, viewed his old companion with a look betokening confusion and As for Gauntlet, he could not, without emotion, behold such a woful reverse of fate, in a person for whom he entertained the noblest sentiments of friendship, gratitude, and efteem: his forrow was at first too big for utterance, and he shed a flood of tears before he could pronounce one word.

Peregrine, in spite of his misanthropy, could not help being affected with this uncommon testimony of regard; but he strove to slife his fensations; his brows contracted themselves into a severe frown, his eyes kindled into the appearance of live coals: he waved with his hand, in fignal for Godfrey to be gone, and leave fuch a wretch as him to the miseries of his fate; and finding nature too ftrong to be suppressed, uttered

a deep groan, and wept aloud.

The foldier, feeing him thus melted, unable to restrain the strong impulse of his affection, sprung towards, and clasping him in his arms, " My dearest friend and best benefactor (faid he), I am come hither to humble myfelf for the offence I was so unhappy as to give at our last parting; to beg a reconciliation; to thank you for the ease and affluence I have enjoyed through your means, and to refcue you, in spite of yourfelf, from this melancholy fituation; of which, but an hour ago, I was utterly ignorant. Do not deny me the satisfaction of acquitting myself in point of duty and obligation. You must certainly have had some regard for a person in whofe whose favour you have exerted yourself so much; and if any part of that esteem remains, you will not refuse him an opportunity of approving himfelf, in some meafure, worthy of it. Let me not fuffer the most mortifying of all repulses, that of flighted friendship; but kindly facrifice your refentment and inflexibility to the request of one who is at all times ready to facrifice his life for your honour and advantage. If you will not yield to my intreaties, have some regard to the withes of my Sophy, who hid me under the firongest injunctions to folicit your forgiveness, even before the knew how much I was indebted to your generofity; or, if that confideration thould be of no weight, I hope you will relax a little for the fake of poor Emilia, whose refentment hath been long fubdued by her affection, and who now droops in fecret at your neglect."

R

Every word of this address, delivered in the most pathetic manner, made an impression upon the mind of l'eregrine : he was affected with the submission of his friend, who, in reality, had given him no just cause to complain. He knew that no ordinary motive had fwayed him to a condefcension so extraordinary in a man of his punctilious temper; he confidered it, therefore, as the genuine effect of eager gratitude and difinterested love, and his heart began to relent accordingly. When he heard himself conjured in the name of the gentle Sophy, his obstinacy was quite overcome; and when Emilia was recalled to his remembrance, his whole frame underwent a violent agitation. He took his friend by the hand, with a foftened look; and as foon as he recovered the faculty of speech, which had been overpowered in the conflict of passions that transported him, protested, that he retained no vestige of animofity, but confidered him in the light of an affectionate comrade, the ties of whose friendship, advertity could not unbind unbind. He mentioned Sophy in the most respectful terms; spoke of Emilia with the most reverential awe, as the object of his inviolable love and veneration; but disclaimed all hope of ever more attracting her regard; and excused himself from profiting by Godfrey's kind intention, declaring, with a resolute air, that he had broke off all connection with mankind, and that he impatiently longed for the hour of his dissolution, which, if it should not soon arrive by the course of nature, he was resolved to hasten it with his own hands, rather than be exposed to the contempt, and more intolerable pity, of a rascally world.

Gauntlet argued against this frantic determination with all the vehemence of expostulating friendship; but his remonstrances did not produce the desired effect upon our desperate hero, who calmly resuted all his arguments, and afferted the restitude of his design from the pretended maxims of reason and true philosophy.

While this dispute was carried on with eagerness on one side, and deliberation on the other, a letter was brought to Peregrine, who threw it carelessly aside unopened, though the superscription was in an hand-writing to which he was a stranger; and, in all probability, the contents would never have been perused, had not Gauntlet insisted upon his waving all ceremony, and reading it forthwith. Thus solicited, Pickle unsealed the billet, which, to his no small surprise, contained the following intimation:

Mr P. PICKLE,

SIR.

THIS comes to inform you, that after many dangers and disappointments, I am, by the bleffing of God, safely arrived in the Downs, on board of the Gomberoon Indiaman, having made a telerable voyage, by which I hope I shall be enabled to repay, with interest, the seven hundred pounds which I borrowed of you before my departure from England. I take this opportunity of writing by our purser, who goes express with dispatches for the Company, that you may have this fatisfactory notice as soon as possible, relating to one whom I suppose you have long given over as lost. I have inclosed it in a letter to my broker, who, I hope, knows your address, and will forward it accordingly. And I am, with respect, Sir,

Your most humble servant,

BENJAMIN CHINTZ.

h

P

10

hi

111

th

he

fci

an

fri

Ha

and

nac

He had no fooner taken a curfory view of this argreeable epifile, than his countenance cleared up; and reaching it to his friend, with a fmile, "There(faid he) is a more convincing argument on your fide of the question, than all the casuits in the universe can advance." Gauntlet, wondering at this observation, took the paper, and casting his eyes greedily upon the contents, congratulated him upon the receipt of it with extravagant demonstrations of joy: Not on account of the sum (said he), which, upon my honour, I would, with pleasure, pay three times over for your convenience and satisfaction; but because it seems to have reconciled you to life, and disposed your mind for re-enjoying the comforts of society.

The inflantaneous effect which this unexpected finile of fortune produced in the appearance of our adventurer, is altogethr inconceivable; it plumped up his cheeks in a moment, unbended and enlightened every feature of his face; elevated his head, which had begun to fink as it were, between his shoulders, and, from a squeaking dispirited tone, swelled up his voice to a clear, manly

accen t

Godfrey, taking advantage of this favourable change, began to regale him with prospects of future fuccess: he reminded him of his youth and qualifications, which were certainly defigned for better days than those he had as yet seen: he pointed out various paths by which he might arrive at wealth and reputation: he importuned him to accept of a fum for his immediate occasions; and earnestly begged that he would allow him to discharge the debt for which he was confined; observing, that Sophy's fortune had enabled him to exhibit that proof of his gratitude, without any detriment to his affairs; and protesting that he should not believe himself in possession of Mr Pickle's esteem, unless he was permitted to make fome fuch return of good-will to the man who had not only raifed him from indigence and fcorn to competence and reputable rank, but also empowered him to obtain the possession of an excellent woman, who had filled up the measure of his felicity.

Peregrine declared himself already overpaid for all his good offices, by the pleasure he enjoyed in employing them, and the happy effects they had produced, in the mutual satisfaction of two persons so dear to his affection; and assured his friend, that one time or other he would set his conscience at ease, and remove the scruples of his honour, by having recourse to his assistance; but at the present he could not make use of his friendship, without giving just cause of offence to honest Hatchway, who was prior to him in point of solicitation, and had manifested his attachment with surprising obstinacy and perseverance.

(B)

CHAP. CII.

Peregrine reconciles himself to the Lieutenant; and renews his connection with society. Divers plans are projected in his behalf; and he has occasion to exhibit a remarkable proof of self-denial.

THE Captain, with reluctance, yielded the preference in this particular to Jack, who was immediately invited to a conference, by a note subscribed with Pickle's He was found at the prison gate, waiting own hand. for Gauntlet, to know the iffue of his negociation. He no fooner received this fummons than he fet all his fails, and made the best of his way to his friend's apartment; being admitted by the turnkey, in confequence of Peregrine's request, communicated by the messenger who carried the billet. Pipes followed close in the wake of his shipmate; and, in a few minutes after the note had been dispatched, Peregrine and Gauntlet heard the found of the stump, ascending the wooden stair-case with such velocity, that they at first mistook it for the application of drum-sticks to the head of an empty barrel. This uncommon speed, however, was attended with a misfortune: he chanced to overlook a small defect in one of the steps, and his prop plunging into a hole, he fell backwards, to the imminent danger of his life. Tom was luckily at his back, and fustained him in his arms, fo as that he escaped without any other damage than the loss of his wooden leg, which was fuapt in the middle, by the weight of his body in falling; and fuch was his impatience, that he would not give himself the trouble to disengage the fractured member: unbuckling the whole equipage in a trice, he left it sticking in the crevice,

k

ta

ti

re

Dear Brother,

by a fit of apoplexy; and, as he has died intestate, I give you this notice, that you may, with all speed, come down and take possession of your right, in despite of master Gam and his mother, who, you may be sure, do not sit easy under this unexpected dispensation of providence. I have, by virtue of being a justice of the peace, taken such precautions as I have thought necessary for your advantage; and the suneral shall be deferred until your pleasure be known. Your sister, though sincerely afflicted by her father's sate, submits to the will of heaven with laudable resignation, and begs you will set out for this place without delay; in which request she is joined by, Sir,

Your affectionate brother, and Humble fervant,

CHARLES CLOVER.

Peregrine, at first, looked upon this epistle as a mere illution of the brain, and a continuation of the reverie in which he had been engaged. He read it ten times over, without being perfuaded that he was actually awake; he rubbed, his eyes, and shook his head, in order to shake off the droufy vapours that furrounded him: he hemm'd thrice with great vociferation, fnapp'd his fingers, tweak'd his nofe, started up from his bed, and, opening the calement, took a furvey of the wellknown objects that appeared on each fide of his habitation. Every thing feemed congruous and connected. and he faid within himfelf, " Sure this is the most diftinet dream that ever fleep produced." Then he had recourse again to the paper, which he carefully perused without VOL. IV.

without finding any variation from his first notion of the contents.

Hatchway, seeing all this extravagance of action, accompanied with a wild stare of distraction, began to believe that his head was at length fairly turned, and was really meditating means for securing his person; when Pickle, in a tone of surprise, exclaimed, "Good God! am I, or am I not awake?" "Why, look ye, cousin Pickle, (replied the Lieutenant) that is a question which the deep sea-line of my understanding is not long enough to sound; but howsomever, tho's I can't trust to the observation I have taken, it shall go hard but I will fall upon a way to guess whereabouts we are." So saying, he listed up a pitcher sull of cold water, that stood behind the outward door, and discharged it in the sace of Peregrine without ceremony or he. sitation.

This remedy produced the defired effect: unpalatable as it was, the young gentleman no fooner recovered his breath, which was endangered by such a sudden application, than he thanked his friend Jack for the feasonable operation he had performed. Having no longer any just reason to doubt the reality of what appeared so convincingly to his senses, he shifted himself on the instant, not without hurry and trepidation; and putting on his morning-dress, sallied forth to the Bare in order to deliberate with himself on the important intelligence he had received.

Hatchway, not yet fully convinced of his fanity, and curious to know the purport of the letter which had affected him in such an extraordinary manner, carefully attended his footsteps in this excursion, in hopes of being favoured with his confidence in the course of their perambulation. Our hero no sooner appeared at the street-door, than he was faluted by the messenger, who.

who, having posted himself in the way for that purpose, " God blefs your noble Honour, Squire Pickle (cried he), and give you joy of succeeding to your Father's estate." These words had scarce proceeded from his mouth, when the Lieutenant hopping eagerly towards the country man, squeezed his hand with great affection, and asked if the old gentleman had actually taken his departure? " Ay, matter Hatchway, (replied the other) in such a woundy hafte, that he forgot to make a will." " Body o' me! (exclaimed the feaman) thefe are the best tidings I have heard fince I first went to fea. Here, my lad, take my purse, and flow thyself choke full of the best liquor in the land." So faying, he tipped the peafant with ten pieces, and immediately the whole place echoed with the found of Tom's instrument. Peregrine repairing to the walk, communicated the billet to his honest friend, who, at his defire, went forthwith to the lodgings of captain Gauntlet, and returned in less than half an hour with that gentleman, who, (I need not fay) was heartily rejoiced at the occasion.

Y 2

CHAP.

CHAP. CIV.

Peregrine holds a consultation with his friends, in confequence of which he bids adieu to the Fleet. He arrives at his father's house, and afferts his right of inheritance.

NOR did our hero keep the misanthrope in ignorance of this happy turn of fortune: Pipes was dispatched to the senior with a message requesting his immediate presence; and he accordingly appeared, in obedience to the summons, growling with discontent for having been deprived of several hours of his natural rest. His mouth was immediately stopped with the letter, at which he smiled horribly a ghastly grin; and, after a compliment of congratulation, they entered into close divan about the measures to be taken in consequence of this event.

There was no room for much debate: it was unanimously agreed, that Pickle should set out with all possible dispatch for the garrison, to which Gauntlet and Hatchway resolved to attend him. Pipes was accordingly ordered to prepare a couple of post-chaises, while Godfrey went to procure bail for his friend, and provide them with money for the expence of the expedition; but not before he was defired by Peregrine to conceal this piece of news from his fister, that our youth might have an opportunity to surprise her in a more interesting manner after he should have settled his affairs.

All these previous steps being taken in less than anhour, our hero took his leave of the Fleet, after he had lest twenty guineas with the warden for the relief of the poor prisoners, a great number of whom convoyed him to the gate, pouring forth prayers for his long life and prosperity; and he took the road to the garrison, in the most elevated transports of joy, unallayed with the least mixture of grief at the death of a parent whose paternal tenderness he had never known. His breast was absolutely a stranger to that boasted $\(\Sigma_{1}\gamma_{2}\gamma_{2}\gamma_{3}\gamma_{3}\), or instant of affection, by which the charities are supposed to subfift.

Of all the journies he had ever made, this fure was the most delightful: he felt all the ecstasy that must naturally be produced in a young man of his imagination, from such a sudden transition in point of circumstance; he found him elf delivered from confinement and disgrace, without being obliged to any person upon earth for his deliverance; he had it now in his power to retort the contempt of the world in a manner suited to his most sanguine with; he was reconciled to his friend, and enabled to gratify his live, even upon his own terms; and saw himself in possession of a fortune more ample than his first inheritance, with a stock of experience that would steer him clear of all those quicksands among which he had been formerly wrecked.

In the middle of their journey, while they halted at an inn for a thort refrethment and change of horses, a possible normal up to Peregrine in the yard, sell at his feet, classed his knees with great earnestness and agitation, and presented to him the individual face of his old valet de chambre. The youth perceiving him in such an abject garb and a titude, commanded him to rise and tell the cause of such a miteraule reverse in his fortune. Upon which Hadge gave him to understand, that he had been raised by his wife, who, having robbed him of all his cash and valuable effects, eloped from his house, with one of his own customers who appeared in the character of a French Count, but was in reality no other than an Italian sidler; that, in consequence of this retreat, he (the husband,) was disabled from paying a considerable sum which he had set apart for his wine-merchant, who, being disappointed in his expectation, took out an execution against his essects; and the rest of his creditors following his example, hunted him out of house and home: so that sinding his person in danger at London, he had been obliged to escape into the country, skulking about from one village to another, till, being quite destitute of all support, he had undertaken his present office to save himself from starving.

Peregrine listened with compassion to his lamentable tale, which too well accounted for his not appearing in the Fleet with offers of service to his master in distress; a circumstance that Pickle had all along imputed to his avarice and ingratitude. He assured him, that as he had been the means of throwing in his way the temptation to which he fell a sacrifice, he would charge himself with the retrieval of his affairs: in the mean time he made him taste of his bounty, and desired him to continue in his present employment until he should return from the garrison, when he would consider his situation, and do something for his immediate relief.

Hadgi attempted to kiss his shoe, and wept, or asfested to weep, with sensibility, at this gracious reception; he even made a merit of his unwillingness to exercise his new occupation, and earnestly begged that he might be allowed to give immediate attendance upon his dear master, from whom he could not bear the thoughts of a second parting. His entreaties were reinforced by the intercession of his two friends, in consequence fequence of which, the Swiss was permitted to follow them at his own leifure, while they set forwards, after a slight repast, and reached the place of their destination before ten o'clock at night.

Peregrine, instead of alighting at the garrison, rode straightway to his father's house; and no person appearing to receive him, not even a servant to take care of his chaise, he dismounted without assistance. Being sollowed by his two friends, he advanced into the hall, where perceiving a bell-rope, he made immediate application to it in such a manner as brought a couple of sootmen into his presence. After having reprimanded them, with a stern look, for their neglect in point of attendance, he commanded them to shew him into an appartment; and as they seemed unwilling to yield obedience to his orders, asked if they did not belong to the samily.

One of them, who took upon himself the office of spokesman, replied with a fullen air, That they had been in the service of old Mr Pickle, and, now that he was dead, thought themselves bound to obey no body but their lady and her fon Mr Gamaliel. This declaration had fearce proceeded from his mouth, when our hero gave them to understand, that fince they were not difpoled to own any other mafter, they must change their quarters immediately. He ordered them to decamp without further preparation; and as they fill continued restive, they were kicked out of doors by the Captain and his friend Hatchway. Squire Gam, who overheard every thing that passed, and was now more than ever inflamed with that rancour which he had sucked with his mother's milk, flew to the assistance of his adherents, with a pistol in each hand, bellowing, Thieves! thieves! with great vociferation, as if he had mistaken the business of the strangers, and actually believed himself in danger danger of being robbed. Under this pretence he discharged a piece at his brother, who luckily escaping the shot, closed with him in a moment, and wresting the other pistol from his gripe, turned him out into the court yard, to the consolation of his two dependents.

(P)

By this time Pipes and the two posillions had taken peffeffion of the flable, without being opposed by the coachman and his deputy, who quietly submitted to the authority of their new fovereign; but the noise of the pittel had alarmed Mrs Pickle, who running down flairs with the most frantic appearance, attended by two maids and the curate, who flill maintained his place of chaplain and ghoftly director in the family, would have affaulted our hero with her mails, had not the been refirained by her attendants. Though they prevented her from ting her hands, they could not hinder her from exercifing her tongue, which the wagged against him with all the virulence of malice. She asked, if he was come to butcher his brother, to infult his father's corpfe, and triumph in her affliction? She bestowed upon him the egithets of fpendthritt, jailbird, and unnatural ruffian; she begged pardon of God for having brought fuch a monfter into the world; accused him of having brought his father's grey hairs with forrow to the grave; and affirmed, that, were he to touch the bo. dy, it would bleed at his approach,

Without pretending to refute the articles of this ridiculous charge, he allowed her to ring out her alarm; and then calmly replied, that if the did not quietly retire to her chamber, and behave as becare a perfon in her prefent fituation, he should infift u, on her removing to another lodging without delay; for he was determined to be matter in his own family. The lady, who in all probability expected that he would endeavour to appeare her with all the tenderness of filial submission, was so much exasperated at his cavalier behaviour, that her constitution could not support the transports of her spirits; and she was carried off by her women in a sit, while the officious clergyman was dismissed after his pupil, with all the circumstances of disgrace.

1425

Our hero having thus made his quarters good, took" possession of the best apartment in the house, and fent notice of his arrival to Mr Clover, who, with his wife, visited him in less than an hour, and was not a little furprised to find him so suddenly settled in his father's house. The meeting of Julia and her brother was extremely pathetic. She had always loved him with uncommon tenderness, and looked upon him as the ornament of her family; but the had heard of his extravagancies with regret; and though the confidered the flories that were circulated at his expence as the malicious exaggerations of his mother and her darling fon, her apprehension had been grievously alarmed by an account of his imprisonment and distress, which had been accidentally conveyed to that county by a gentleman from London, who had formerly been of his acquaintance: the could not, therefore, without the most tender emotions of joy, fee him, as it were, restored to his rightful inheritance, and re established in that station of life which the thought he could fill with dignity and importance.

After their mutual expressions of affection, she retired to her mother's chamber, with a view to make a second offer of her service and attendance, which had been already rejected with scorn since her father's death; while Peregrine consulted his brother in-law about the affairs of the samily, so far as they had fallen within his cognizance and observation.

Mr Clover told him, that though he was never favoured with the confidence of the defunct, he knew fome of his intimates, who had been tampered with by Mrs Pickle, and even engaged to second the remonstrances by which the had often endeavoured to perfuade her husband to settle his affairs by a formal will; but that he had, from time to time, evaded their importunities with furprifing excuses of prograffination that plainly appeared to be the result of invention and defign, far above the supposed pitch of his capacity; a circumflance from which Mr Clover concluded, that the old gentleman imagined his life would not have been fecure, had he once taken fuch a flep as would have rendered it unnecessary to the independence of his second fon. He moreover observed, that, in consequence of this information, he no fooner heard of Mr Pickle's death, which happened at the club, than he went directly with a lawyer to his house, before any cabal or confpiracy could be formed against the rightful heir; and, in presence of witnesses provided for the purpose, sealed up all the papers of the deceased, after the widow had, in the first transports of her forrow and vexation, fairly owned that her he foand had died intellate.

R

Peregrine was extremely well satisfied with this intelligence, by which all his doubts were dispelled; and having cheerfully supped with his friends on a cold collation which his brother-in-law had brought in his chariot, they retired to rest in different chambers, after Julia had met with another repulse from her capricious mother, whose overslowing rage had now subsided into the former channel of calm inveteracy.

Next morning the house was supplied with some serwants from the garrison, and preparations were made for the funeral of the deceased. Gan having taken lodgings in the neighbourhood, came with a chaise and cart to.

fo

no

fe

m

hu

fi:

ge.

the

the

to demand his mother, together with his own clothes, and her personal effects.

Our hero, though he would not suffer him to enter the door, allowed his proposal to be communicated to the widow, who eagerly embraced the opportunity of removing, and was with her own baggage, and that of her believed son, conveyed to the place which he had prepared for her reception. Thither she was followed by her woman, who was desired by Peregrine to assure her mistress, that, until a regular provision could be fettled upon her, she might command him, in point of money, or any other accommodation in his power.

CHAP. CV.

He performs the last offices to his father, and returns to London upon a very interesting design.

GUITS of mourning being provided for himself, his friends, and adherents, and every other previous measure taken, suitable to the occasion, his father was interred, in a private manner, in the parish-church; and his papers being examined, in presence of many perfons of honour and integrity invited for that purpose, no will was found, or any other deed, in savour of the second son, though it appeared by the marriage settlement that the widow was entitled to a jointure of five hundred pounds a-year. The rest of his papers confished of East-India bonds, South-sea annuities, mortgages, notes, and assignments, to the amount of sourscore thousand seven hundred and fixty pounds, exclusive of the house, plate, and furniture, horses, equipage, and cattle, cattle, with the garden and park adjacent, to a very confiderable extent.

This was a fum that even exceeded his expectation, and could not fail to entertain his fancy with the most agreeable ideas. He found himself immediately a man of vast consequence among his country neighbours, who vifited him with compliments of congratulation, and treated him with fuch respect as would have effectually spoiled any young man of his disposition, who had not the same advantages of experience as he had already purchased at a very extravagant price. Thus shielded with caution, he bore his prosperity with furprifing temperance; every body was charmed with his affability and moderation. When he made a circuit round the gentlemen of the diffrict, in order to repay the courtefy which he owed, he was careffed by them with uncommon affiduity, and advised to offer himself as a candidate for the county at the next election, which, they supposed, would foon happen, because the present member was in a declining flate of health. Nor did his person and address escape unheeded by the ladies, many of whom did not scruple to spread their attractions before him, with a view of captivating such a valuable prize; nay, fuch an impression did this legacy make upon a certain peer, who refided in this part of the country, that he cultivated rickle's acquaintance with great eagerness, and, without circumlocution, offered to him in marriage his only daughter, with a very confiderable fortune.

Our hero expressed himself, upon this occasion, as became a man of hencur, sensibility, and politeness; and frankly gave his loroship to understand, that his heart was already engaged. He was pleafed with the opportunity of making fuch a facrifice to his passion for Emilia, which, by this time, enflamed his thoughts to fuck erevice, saying, a rotten cable was not worth the heaving up, and in this natural state of mutilation, hopped into the room with infinite expedition.

Peregrine taking him cordially by the hand, feated him upon one fide of his bed; and after having made an apology for that referve of which he had so justly complained, asked if he could conveniently accommodate him with the loan of twenty guineas. The lieutenant, without opening his mouth, pulled out his purse; and Pipes, who overheard the demand, applying the whiftle to his lips, performed a loud overture, in token of his joy. Matters being thus brought to an accommodation, our hero told the captain, that he should be glad of his company at dinner, with their common friend Hatchway, if he would in the mean time leave him to the ministry of Pipes; and the foldier went away for the present, in order to pay a short visit to his uncle, who, at that time, languished in a declining state of health, promising to return at the appointed hour.

The Lieutenant, having furveyed the dismal appearance of his friend, could not help being moved at the spectacle, and began to upbraid him with his obstinate pride, which (he fwore) was no better than felf-murder. But the young gentleman interrupted him in the course of his moralizing, by telling him he had reasons for his conduct, which, perhaps, he should impart in due seafon; but, at prefent, his design was to alter that plan of behaviour, and make himself some amends for the misery he had undergone. He accordingly sent Pipes to redeem his clothes from the pawn-broker's wardrobe. and bespeak something comfortable for dinner. Godfrey came back, he was very agreeably furprifed to fee fuch a favourable alteration in his externals; for, by the affiftance of his valet, he had purified himself from the dregs of his diffress, and now appeared in a decent VOL. IV. fuit.

fuit, with clean linen, while his face was difincumbered of the hair that overshadowed it, and his apartment prepared for the reception of company.

They enjoyed their meal with great satisfaction, entertaining one another with a recapitulation of their former adventures at the garrison. In the afternoon, Gauntlet taking his leave, in order to write a letter to his fifter, at the defire of his uncle, who, finding his end approaching, wanted to fee her without loss of time, Peregrine made his appearance on the Bare, and was complimented on his coming abroad again, not only by his old mess-mates, who had not seen him for many weeks, but by a number of those objects whom his liberality had fed before his funds were exhausted. Hatchway was, by his interest with the warden, put in possession of his former quarters, and Pipes dispatched to make inquiry about Crabtree at his former lodging, where he learned, that the misanthrope, after a very severe fit of illness, was removed to Kenfington Gravelpits, for the convenience of breathing a purer air than that of London.

In consequence of this information, Peregrine, who knew the narrowness of the old gentleman's fortune, next day desired his friend Gauntlet to take the trouble of visiting him, in his name, with a letter, in which he expressed great concern for his indisposition, gave him notice of the fortunate intelligence he had received from the Downs, and conjured him to make use of his purse if he was in the least hampered in his circumstances. The captain took coach immediately, and set out for the place, according to the direction which Pipes had procured.

Cadwallader having feen him at Bath, knew him again at first sight; and though reduced to a skeleton, believed himself in such a fair way of doing well, that he would have accompanied him to the Fleet immediately, had not he been restrained by his nurse, who was, by his physician, invested with full authority to dispute and oppose his will, in every thing that she should think prejudicial to his health; for he was confidered by those who had the care of him as an old humourist, not a little distempered in his brain. He inquired particularly about the failors, who, (he faid), had deterred him from carrying on his usual correspondence with Pickle, and been the immediate cause of his indisposition, by terrifying him into a fever. Understanding that the breach between Pickle and Hatchway was happily cemented, and that he was no longer in any danger from the lieutenant's refentment, he promised to be at the Fleet with the first convenient opportunity; and, in the mean time, wrote an answer to Peregrine's letter, importing, that he was obliged to him for his offer, but had not the least occasion for his affistance.

In a few days, our adventurer recovered his vigour, complexion, and vivacity; he mingled again in the diversions and parties of the place; and he received, in a little time, the money he had lent upon bottomry which, together with the interest, amounted to upwards of eleven hundred pounds. The possession of this fum, while it buoyed up his spirits, involved him in perplexities. Sometimes he thought it was incumbent upon him, as a man of honour, to employ the greatest part of it, in diminishing the debt for which he suffered; on the other hand, he confidered that obligation effaced, by the treacherous behaviour of his creditor. who had injured him to ten times the value of the fum; and in these sentiments, entertained thoughts of attempting his escape from prison, with a view of conveying himself, with the shipwreck of his fortune, to another country, in which he might use it to better advantage.

X 2 Both

Both fuggestions were attended with fuch doubts and difficulties, that he hesitated between them, and, for the present, laid out a thousand pounds in stock, the interest of which, together with the fruits of his own industry, he hoped would support him above want in his confinement, until fomething should occur that would point out the expediency of some other determination. Gauntlet still infisted upon having the honour of obtaining his liberty at the expence of taking up his notes to Gleanum, and exhorted him to purchase a commission with part of the money which he had re-The Lieutenant affirmed, that it was his privilege to procure the release of his cousin Pickle, because he enjoyed a very handsome sum by his aunt, which of right belonged to the young gentleman, to whom he was, moreover, indebted for the use of his furniture, and for the very house that stood over his head; and that although he had already made a will in his favour, he should never be satisfied, nor easy in his mind, fo long as he remained deprived of his liberty. and wanted any of the conveniences of life.

Cadwallader, who by this time affifted at their councils, and was best acquainted with the peculiarity and unbending disposition of the youth, proposed, that seeing he was so averse to obligations, Mr Hatchway should purchase of him the garrison with its appendages, which, at a moderate price, would sell for more money than would be sufficient to discharge his debts; that if the service subordination of the army did not suit his inclinations, he might, with the reversion, buy a comfortable annuity, and retire with him to the country; where he might live absolutely independent, and entertain himself, as usual, with the ridiculous characters of mankind.

This plan was to Pickle less disagreeable than any other other project which had as yet been suggested; and the Lieutenant declared himself ready to execute his part of it without delay: but the soldier was mortified at the thoughts of seeing his assistance unnecessary, and eagerly objected to the retirement, as a scheme that would blast the fairest prospects of same and fortune, and bury his youth and talents in solitude and obscurity. This earnest opposition on the part of Gauntlet hindered our adventurer from forming any immediate resolution; which was also retarded by his unwillingness to part with the garrison upon any terms, because he looked upon it as a part of his inheritance, which he could not dispose of, without committing an insult on the memory of the deceased Commodore.

CHAP. CIII.

He is engaged in a very extraordinary correspondence; which is interrupted by a very unexpected event.

WHILE this affair was in agitation, the Captain told him, in the course of conversation, that E-milia was arrived in town, and had inquired about Pickle with such eagerness of concern, as seemed to proclaim that she was in some measure informed of his missortune: he therefore desired to know if he might be allowed to make her acquainted with his situation, provided he should be again importuned by her on that subject, which he had at first industriously waved.

This proof, or rather presumption of her sympathising regard, did not fail to operate powerfully upon the bosom of Peregrine, which was immediately filled with those tumults which love, ill slissed, frequently excites. He observed, that his disgrace was such as could not be effectually concealed: therefore he saw no reason for depriving himself of Emilia's compassion, since he was for ever excluded from her affection; and desired Godfrey to present to his sister the lowly respects of a despairing lover.

But notwithstanding his declaration of despondence on this head, his imagination involuntarily teemed with more agreeable ideas: the proposal of Crabtree had taken root in his reflection, and he could not help forming plans of paftoral felicity in the arms of the lovely Emilia, remote from those pompous scenes which he now detefted and despised. He amused his fancy with the prospect of being able to support her in a state of independency, by means of the flender annuity which it was in his power to purchase, together with the fruits of those endeavours which would profitably employ his vacant hours; and forefaw provision for his growing family in the friendship of the Lieutenant, who had already constituted him his heir. He even parcelled out his hours among the necessary cares of the world, the pleasures of domestic bliss, and the enjoyments of a country life; and spent the night in ideal parties with his charming bride, fometimes walking by the fedgy bank of fome transparent stream, fometimes pruning the luxuriant vine, and sometimes fitting in focial converse with her in a shady grove of his own planting.

These, however, were no more than the shadowy phantoms of imagination, which he well knew would never be realized: not that he believed such happiness unattainable by a person in her circumstances, but because he would not stoop to propose a scheme which might might, in any shape, seem, to interfere with the interest of Emilia, or subject himself to a repulse from that young lady, who had rejected his addresses in the zenith of his fortune.

While he diverted himself with these agreeable reveries, an unexpected event intervened, in which the and her brother were deeply interested. The uncle was tapped for the dropfy, and died in a few days after the operation; having bequeathed, in his will, five thousand pounds to his nephew, and twice that sum to his niece, who had always enjoyed the greatest share of his favour. If our adventurer, before this occurence, looked upon his love for Emilia as a passion which it was necessary, at any rate, to conquer or suppress, he now confidered her accession of fortune as a circumstance which confirmed that necessity, and resolved to difcourage every thought on that subject which should tend to the propagation of hope. One day, in the midst of a conversation calculated for the purpose, Godfrey put into his hand a letter directed to Mr Pickle, in the hand-writing of Emilia; which the youth no fooner recognized, than his cheeks were covered with a crimson dye, and he began to tremble with violent agitation: for he at once gueffed the import of the billet, which he kiffed with great reverence and devotion, and was not at all furprifed when he read the following words:

SIR,

I Have performed a sufficient sacrifice to my reputation, in retaining hitherto the appearance of that resentment which I had long ago dismissed; and as the late savourable change in my situation impowers me to avow my genuine sentiments, without sear of censure, or suspicion of mercenary design, I take this opportuniR

ty to affure you, that if I still maintain that place in your heart which I was vain enough to think I once possessed, I am willing to make the first advances to an accommodation; and have actually furnished my brother with full powers to conclude it in the name of your appeased

EMILIA.

Pickle, having kiffed the subscription with great ardour, fell upon his knees, and lifting up his eyes, " Thank heaven! (cried he with an air of transport) I have not been mistaken in my opinion of that generous maid. I believed her inspired with the most dignified and heroic fentiments, and now shew gives me a convincing proof of her magnanimity: it is now my business to approve myself worthy of her regard. May heaven inflict upon me the keenest arrows or its vengeance, if I do not at this instant contemplate the character of Emilia with the most perfect love and adoration! Yet, amiable and inchanting as she is, I am, more than ever, determined to facrifice the interest of my passion to my glory, though my life should fail in the contest; and even to refuse an offer, which, otherwise, the whole universe should not bribe me to forego."

This declaration was not so unexpected as unwelcome to his friend Gauntlet, who represented that his glory was not at all interested in the affair; because he had already vindicated his generosity, in repeated proffers to lay his whole fortune at Emilia's seet, when it was impossible that any thing selfish could enter into the proposal: but that, in rejecting her present purpose, he would give the world an opportunity to say, that his pride was capricious, his obstinacy invincible, and his sister would have undeniable reason to believe, that either his passion for her was diffembled, or the ardour of it considerably abated.

In answer to these remonstrances, Pickle observed, that he had long set the world at desiance; and as to the opinion of Emilia, he did not doubt that she would applaud, in her heart, the resolution he had taken, and do justice to the purity of his intention.

It was not an easy task to divert our hero from his defigns at any time of life; but fince his confinement, his inflexibility was become almost insurmountable. The captain, therefore, after having discharged his conscience, in assuring him that his sister's happiness was at stake, that his mother had approved of the step she had taken, and that he himself should be extremely mortified at his resusal, forebore to press him with farther argument, which served only to rivet him the more strongly in his own opinion; and undertook to deliver this answer to Emilia's letter:

MADAM,

THAT I revere the dignity of your virtue with the utmost veneration, and love you infinitely more than life, I am at all times ready to demonstrate; but, the facrifice to honour, it is now my own turn to pay; and such is the rigour of my destiny, that, in order to justify your generosity, I must refuse to profit by your condescension. Madam, I am doomed to be for ever wretched, and to sigh without ceasing for the possession of that jewel, which, though now in my offer, I dare not enjoy. I shall not pretend to express the anguish that tears my heart whilst I communicate this fatal renunciation, but appeal to the delicacy of your own sentiments, which can judge of my sufferings, and will, doubtless, do justice to the self-denial of your forlors

Emilia, who knew the nicety of our hero's pride, had foreseen the purport of this epistle before it came to her hands; the did not therefore despair of success, nor defift from the profecution of her plan, which was no other than that of fecuring her own happiness, in efpouling the man upon whom the had fixed her unalterable affection. Confident of his honour, and fully fatisfied of the mutual passion with which they were inspired, the gradually decoyed him into a literary correspondence, wherein she attempted to resute the arguments on which he grounded his refusal; and, without doubt, the young gentleman was not a little pleafed with the enjoyment of fuch delightful commerce, in the course of which he had (more than ever) an opportunity of admiring the poignancy of her wit, and the elegance of her understanding.

The contemplation of fuch excellency, while it strengthened the chains with which she held him enflaved, added emulation to the other motives that induced him to maintain the dispute; and much subtlety of reasoning was expended upon both sides of this very particular question, without any prospect of conviction on either part, till at last she began to despair of making him a profelyte in her opinion by dint of argument, and refolved, for the future, to apply herfelf chiefly to the irrefiftible prepossessions of his love, which were not at all diminshed or impaired by the essays of her pen. With this view, she proposed a conference, pretending that it was impossible to convey all her reflections upon this subject in a series of short letters; and Godfrey undertook to bail him for the day: but, conscious of her power, he would not trust himself in her presence, though his heart throbbed with all the eagerness of defire to fee her fair eyes disrobed of that resentment which

which they had wore fo long, and to enjoy the ravishiing sweets of a fond reconciliation.

Nature could not have held out against such powerful attacks, had not the pride and caprice of his difposition been gratified to the full in the triumph of his refiftance; he looked upon the contest as altogether original, and perfevered with obstinacy, because he thought himself sure of favourable terms whenever he should be disposed to capitulate. Perhaps he might have overshot himself in the course of his perseverance: a young lady of Emilia's fortune and attractions, could not fail to find herfelf furrounded by temptations which few women can refist. She might have misinterpreted the meaning of some paragraph, or taken umbrage at an unguarded expression in one of Peregrine's letters: the might have been tired out by his obstinate peculiarity; or, at the long-run, conftrued it into madness, flight, or indifference : or, rather than waste her prime in fruitless endeavours to subdue the pride of an headstrong humourist, she might have listened to the voice of some admirer, fraught with qualifications sufficient to engage her esteem and affection. But all these possibilities were providentially prevented by an accident, attended with more important confequence than any we have hitherto recounted.

Early one morning, Pipes was disturbed by the arrival of a messenger, who had been sent express from the country by Mr Clover, with a packet for the Lieutenant, and arrived in town over-night; but as he was obliged to have recourse to the information of Jack's correspondent in the city, touching the place of his abode, before he demanded entrance at the Fleet, the gate was shut; nor would the turnkeys admit him, although he told them, that he was charged with a message of the utmost consequence; so that he was fain to tarry till day-break, when he, at his earnest solicitation, was allowed to enter.

Hatchway, opening the packet, found a letter inclofed for Peregrine, with an earnest request, that he should forward it to the hands of that young gentleman with all possible dispatch. Jack, who could not dive into the meaning of this extraordinary injunction, began to imagine that Mrs Clover lay at the point of death, and wanted to take her last farewell of her brother; and this conceit worked so strongly upon his imagination, that, while he huddled on his clothes, and made the best of his way to the apartment of our hero, he could not help cursing, within himself, the folly of the husband in sending such disagreeable messages to a man of Peregrine's impatient temper, already soured by his own uneasy situation.

This reflection would have induced him to suppress the letter, had not he been asraid to tamper with the ticklish disposition of his friend, to whom, while he delivered it, "As for my own part, (said he), mayhap I may have as much natural affection as another; but when my spouse departed, I bore my missortune like a British man and a Christian: for why? he's no better than a fresh-water sailor, who knows not how to stem the current of mischance."

Pickle being waked from a pleafing dream, in which the fair Emilia was principally concerned, and hearing this strange preamble, sat up in his bed, and unsealed the letter in a state of mortification and disgust: but what were the emotions of his soul, when he read the following intimation! fuch a degree of impatience, that he resolved to depart for London with all possible speed, and, for that purpose, industriously employed almost every hour of his time in regulating his domestic affairs.

He paid off all his father's servants, and hired others, at the recommendation of his sister, who promised to superintend his household in his absence. He advanced the first half-yearly payment of his mother's jointure; and as for his brother Gam, he gave him divers opportunities of acknowledging his faults, so as that he might have answered to his own conscience for taking any step in his favour; but that young gentleman was not yet sufficiently humbled by misfortune, and not only forbore to make any overtures of peace, but also took all occasions to slander the conduct, and revile the perfon of our hero, being, in this practice, comforted and abetted by his righteous mamma.

Every thing being thus settled for the present, the triumvirate fet out on their return to town in the same manner with that in which they had arrived in the country, except in this small variation, that Hatchway's chaife-companion was now the valet de chambre refitted, instead of Pipes, who, with another lackey, attended them on horseback. When they had performed two thirds of their way to London, they chanced to overtake a country squire on his return from a visit to one of his neighbours, who had entertained him with fuch hospitality, that (as the Lieutenant observed) he rolled himself almost gunwale to at every motion of his horse, which was a fine hunter: and when the chaises passed him at full speed, he set up the sportsman's hollow in a voice that founded like a French horn, clapping spurs to Sorrel at the same time, in order to keep up with the pace of the machine.

Peregrine, who was animated with an uncommon Vol. IV. Z flow flow of spirits, ordered his posillion to proceed more foftly; and entered into conversation with the stranger touching the make and mettle of his horse, upon which he descanted with so much learning, that the squire was aftonished at his knowledge. When they approached his habitation, he invited the young gentleman and his company to halt, and drink a bottle of his ale; and was fo pressing in his folicitation that they complied with his request. He accordingly conducted them through a spacious avenue, that extended as far as the highway, to the gate of a large chateau, of a most noble and venerable appearance, which induced them to alight and view the apartments, contrary to their first intention of drinking a glass of his October at the door.

The rooms were every way fuitable to the magnificence of the outfide, and our hero imagined they had made a tour through the whole fweep, when the landlord gave him-to understand that they had not yet feen the best apartment of the house, and immediately led them into a spacious dining-room, which Peregrine did not enter without giving manifest signs of uncommon aftonishment. The pannels all round were covered with portraits, at full length, by Vandyke, and not one of them appeared without a ridiculous tie-periwig, in the flyle of those that usually hang over the shops of two-penny barbers. The strait boots in which the figures had been originally painted, and the other circumftances of attitude and drapery, fo inconfiftent with this monstrous furniture of the head, exhibited such a ludicrous appearance, that Pickle's wonder, in a little time, gave way to his mirth, and he was feized with a violent fit of laughter, which had well nigh deprived him of his breath.

The squire, half pleased and half offended at this expression pression of ridicule, " I know (said he) what makes you laugh fo wofully; you think it strange to zee my vorefathers booted and spurred with huge three-tailed periwigs on their pates. The truth of the matter is this; I could not bide to zee the pictures of my vamily with a parcel of loofe hair hanging about their eyes, like zo many colts; and zo I employed a painter vellow from London to clap decent periwigs upon their skulls, at the rate of vive shillings a-head, and offered him three shillings a-piece to furnish each with a handzome pair of thoes and stockings: but the rascal, thinking I must have 'em done at any price after their heads were covered, haggled with me for your shillings a picture; and zo, rather than be imposed upon, I turned him off, and shall let 'em stand as they are, 'till zome more reasonable brother of the brush comes round the country."

Pickle recommended his resolution, though, in his heart, he blessed himself from such a barbarous Goth; and, after they had dispatched two or three bottles of his beer, they proceeded on their journey, and arrived in town about eleven at night.

CHAPTER the LAST.

He enjoys an interview with Emilia, and makes himself ample amends for all the mortifications of his life.

GODFREY, who had taken leave of his fifter on pretence of making a short excursion with Peregrine, whose health required the enjoyment of fresh air after his long confinement, sent a message to her that same night, announcing his arrival, and giving her Z 2

when he and our hero, who had dreffed himself for the purpose, taking a hackney-coach, repaired to her lodging, and were introduced into a parlour adjoining to that in which the tea-table was set. Here they had not waited many minutes, when they heard the sound of seet coming down stairs, upon which our hero's heart began to beat the alarm. He concealed himself behind the screen by the direction of his friend, whose ears being saluted with Sophy's voice from the next room, he slew into it with great ardour, and enjoyed upon her lips the sweet transports of a meeting so unexpected; for he had left her in her father's house at Windfor.

Amidst these emotions he had almost forgot the fituation of Peregrine; when Emilia, assuming an enchanting air, " Is not this (faid she) a most provoking scene to a young woman, like me, who am doomed to wear the willow by the strange caprice of my lover? Upon my word, brother, you have done me infinite prejudice, in promoting this jaunt with my obstinate correspondent: who, I suppose, is so ravished with this transient glimple of liberty, that he will never be perfuaded to incur unnecoffary confinement for the future." " My dear fifter (replied the Captain, tauntingly) your own pride fet him the example; so you must e'en stand to the consequence of his imitation." "Tis a hard case, however, (answered the fair offender) that I should suffer all my life by one venial trespass. Heigh ho! who would imagine that a sprightly girl, such as I, with ten thousand pounds, should go a-begging? I have a good mind to marry the next person that asks me the question, in order to be revenged on this unvielding humourist. Did the dear fellow discover no inclination to see me, in all the term of his releasement? Well, if

I can catch the fugitive again, he shall sing in his cage for life."

It is impossible to convey to the reader a just idea of Peregrine's transports, while he overheard this declaration; which was no fooner pronounced, than, unable to refift the impetuofity of his passion, he sprung from his lurking place, exclaiming, " Here I furrender;" and rushing into her presence, was so dazzled with her beauty that his speech failed; he was fixed, like a statue, to the stoor, and all his faculties were absorbed in admiration. Indeed the was now in the full bloom of her charms, and it was merely impossible to look upon her without emotion. What then must have been the ecstacy of our youth, whose passion was whetted with all the incitements which could stimulate the human heart! The ladies screamed with surprise at his appearance, and Emilia underwent fuch agitation as flushed every charm with irresistible energy : her cheeks glowed with a most delicate suffusion, and her bosom heaved with such bewitching undulation, that the cambric could not conceal or contain the fnowy hemispheres that rose like a vision of paradise to his view.

While he was almost fainting with unutterable delight, she seemed ready to sink under the tumults of tenderness and consusion; when our hero, perceiving her condition, obeyed the impulse of his love, and circled the charmer in his arms without suffering the least frown or symptom of displeasure. Not all the pleasures of his life had amounted to the inestable joy of this embrace, in which he continued for some minutes totally entranced. He sastened upon her pouting lips with all the eagerness of rapture; and, while his brain seemed to whirl round with transport, exclaimed in a delirium of bliss, "Heaven and earth! this is too much to bear."

Z 3

His imagination was accordingly relieved, and his attention in some measure divided by the interposition of Sophy, who kindly chid him for his having overlooked his old friends: thus accosted, he quitted his delicious armful, and, faluting Mrs Gauntlet, asked pardon for his neglect; observing, that such rudeness was excuseable, confidering the long and unhappy exile which he had suffered from the jewel of his foul. Then turning to Emilia, " I come, Madam, (faid he) to claim the performance of your promise, which I can produce under your own fair hand: you may therefore lay afide all fuperfluous ceremony and shyness, and crown my happiness without further delay; for, upon my foul! my thoughts are wound up to the last pitch of expectation, and I shall certainly run diffracted if I am doomed to any term of probaion."

His mistress, having by this time recollected herself, replied, with a most exhilarating smile, " I ought to punish you for your obstinacy, with the mortification of a twelvemonth's trial; but 'tis dangerous to tamper with an admirer of your disposition, and therefore I think I must make sure of you while it is in my power." "You are willing, then, to take me for better for worse, in presence of heaven and these witnesses?" cried Peregrine, kneeling, and applying her hand to his lips. At this interrogation her features foftened into an amazing expression of condescending love; and while she darted a fide-glance, that thrilled to his marrow, and heaved a figh more foft than zephyr's balmy wing, her answer was, " Why -ay -- and heaven grant me patience to bear the humours of fuch a yoke-fellow." "And, may the same powers (replied the youth) grant me life and opportunity to manifest the immensity of my love. Meanwhile, I have eighty thousand pounds, which shall be laid immediately in your lap."

So faying, he fealed the contract upon her lips, and explained the mystery of his last words, which had begun to operate upon the wonder of the two sisters. Sophy was agreeably surprised with the accounts of his good fortune: nor was it, in all probability, unacceptable to the lovely Emilia; though, from this information, she took an opportunity to upbraid her admirer with the inflexibility of his pride, which (she scrupled not to say) would have bassed all the suggestions of his passion, had not it been gratified by this providential event.

Matters being thus happily matured, the lover begged that immediate recourse might be had to the church, and his happiness ascertained before night. But the bride objected with great vehemence to fuch precipitation, being defirous of her mother's presence at the ceremony; and the was feconded in her opinion by her brother's wife. Peregrine, maddening with defire, affaulted her with the most earnest entreaties, representing, that, as her mother's confent was already obtained, there was furely no necessity for a delay that must infallibly make a dangerous impression upon his brain and constitution. He fell at her feet, in all the agony of impatience; fwore that his life and intellects would actually be in jeopardy by her refusal; and when she attempted to argue him out of his demand, began to rave with such extravagance, that Sophy was frightened into conviction; and Godfrey enforcing the remonstrances of his friend, the amiable Emilia was teazed into compliance.

After breakfast, the bridegroom and his companion set out for the Commons for a licence, having first agreed upon the house at which the ceremony should be performed, in the lodgings of the bride: and the permission being obtained, they found means to engage a clergyman, who undertook to attend them at their own time and place. Then a ring was purchased for the occasion; and they went in fearch of the Lieutenant, with whom they dined at a tavern, and not only made him acquainted with the steps they had taken, but desired that he would stand godfather to the bride : an employment which Jack accepted with demonstrations of particular fatisfaction; 'till chancing to look into the ffreet, and feeing Cadwallader approach the door, in consequence of a message they had sent to him by Pipes. he declined the office in favour of the fenior; who was accordingly ordained for that purpole, on the supposition, that such a mark of regard might facilitate his concurrence with a match, which otherwise he would certainly oppose, as he was a professed enemy to wedlock, and, as yet, ignorant of Peregrine's intention.

After having congratulated Pickle upon his succession, and shook his two friends by the hand, the misanthrope asked whose mare was dead, that he was summoned in such a plaguy hurry from his dinner, which he had been fain to gobble up like a cannibal? Our hero gave him to understand, that they had made an appointment to drink tea with two agreeable ladies, and were unwilling that he should lose the opportunity of enjoying an entertainment which he loved so much. Crabtree, shrivelling up his sace like an autumn leaf, at this intimation, curted his complaisance, and swore they should keep their assignation without him, for he and letchery had shook hands many years ago.

The bridegroom, however, likening him unto an old coachman, who fill delights in the fmack of the whip, and dropping some flattering hints of his manhood, even at these years, he was gradually prevailed upon to accompany them to the place of rendezvous; where, being ushered into a diametroom, they had not waited three minutes,

when

when they were joined by the parson, who had observed the hour with great punctuality.

This gentleman no fooner entered the room, than Cadwallader, in a whisper to Gauntlet, asked, if that was not the cock-bawd? and, before the Captain could make any reply, " What an unconscionable whoremaster the rogue is! (faid he,) scarce discharged from confinement, and fweetened with a little freth air, than he wenches with a pimp in canonicals in his pay." The door again opened, and Emilia broke in upon them, with fuch dignity of mein and divinity of aspect, as inspired every spectator with astonishment and admiration. The Lieutenant, who had not feen her fince her charms were ripened into fuch perfection, expressed his wonder and approbation in an exclamation of "Add's zooks! what a glorious galley !" and the misanthrope's visage was instantly metamorphosed into the face of a mountain-goat. He licked his lips inftinctively, snuffed the air, and fquinted with a most horrible obliquity of vision.

The bride and her fifter being feated, and Hatchway having renewed his acquaintance with the former, who recognized him with particular civility, Peregrine withdrew into another apartment with his friend Crabtree, to whom he imparted the defign of this meeting, which the latter no fooner understood, than he attempted to retreat, without making any other reply than that of "Pshaw! rot your matrimony! can't you put your neck in the noofe without my being a witness of your folly?"

The young gentleman, in order to vanquish this aversion, stepped to the door of the next room, and begged the favour of speaking with Emilia, to whom he introduced the testy old bachelor as one of his particular friends, who desired to have the honour of giving her away. The bewitching smile with which she received his salute, and granted his request, at once overcame the disapprobation of the misanthrope, who, with a relaxation in his countenance, which had never been perceived before that instant, thanked her in the most polite terms for such an agreeable mark of distinction. He accordingly led her into the dining-room, where the ceremony was performed without delay; and, after the husband had afferted his prerogative on her lips, the whole company saluted her by the name of Mrs Pikle.

I shall leave the sensible reader to judge what passed, at this juncture, within the bosoms of the new-married couple: Peregrine's heart was fired with inexpressible ardour and impatience, while the transports of the bride were mingled with a dash of diffidence and apprehenfion. Gauntlet faw it would be too much for both, to bear their present tantalizing fituation till night, without some amusement to diverge their thoughts; and therefore proposed to pass part of the evening at the public entertainment in Mary bone gardens, which were at that time frequented by the best company in town. The scheme was relished by the discreet Sophy, who faw the meaning of the proposal, and the bride fubmitted to the persuasion of her fister; so that, after tea, two coaches were called, and Peregrine was forcibly separated from his charmer during the conveyance.

The new-married couple and their company having made shift to spend the evening, and supped on a slight collation in one of the boxes, Peregrine's patience was almost quite exhausted; and taking Godfrey aside, he imparted his intention to withdraw in private from the sea-wit of his friend Hatchway, who would otherwise retard retard his bliss with unseasonable impediments, which, at present, he could not possibly bear. Gauntlet, who sympathized with his impatience, undertook to intoxicate the Lieutenant with bumpers to the joy of the bride, and, in the mean time, defired Sophy to reire with his fister, under the auspices of Cadwallader, who promised to squire them home.

The ladies were accordingly conducted to the coach, and Jack proposed to the Captain, that, for the fake of the joke, the bridegroom should be plied with liquor, in fuch a manner as would effectually disable him from enjoying the fruits of his good fortune for one night at Gauntlet seemed to relish the scheme, and they prevailed upon Pickle to accompany them to a certain tavern, on pretence of drinking a farewell-glass to a fingle life; there the bottle was circulated 'till Hatchway's brain began to fuffer innovation. had fecured our hero's hat and fword, he felt no apprehension of an elopement, which, however, was effected; and the youth haftened on the wings of love to the arms of his inchanting bride. He found Crabtree in a parlour waiting for his return, and disposed to entertain him with a lecture upon temperance; to which he paid very little attention, but, ringing for Emilia's maid, defired to know if her mistress was a bed. Being anfwered in the affirmative, he fent her up stairs to announce his arrival, undressed himself to a loose gown and slippers, and withing the milanthrope good-night, after having defired to fee him next day, followed in person to the delicious scene, where he found her elegantly dished out, the fairest daughter of chastity and love.

When he approached, she was overwhelmed with confusion, and hid her lovely face from his transporting view. Mrs Gauntlet, seeing his eyes kindled at the occasion, kissed her charming sister, who, throwing her fnowy arms about her neck, would have detained her in the room, had not Peregrine gently disengaged her confidant from her embrace, and conducted her trembling to the door, which having bolted and barricadoed, he profited by his good fortune, and his felicity was perfect.

Next day he rose about noon, and found his three friends affembled, when he learned that Jack had fallen in his own fnare, and been obliged to lie in the fame tavern where he fell: a circumstance of which he was fo much ashamed, that Peregrine and his wife escaped many jokes, which he would have certainly cracked. had he not lain under the imputation of this digrace. In half an hour after he came down, Mrs Pickle appeared with Sophy, blushing like Aurora, or the goddess of health, and sending forth emanations of beauty unparalled; she was complimented upon her change of figuation by all present, and by none more warmly than by old Crabtree, who declared himself so well satisfied with his friend's fortune, as to be almost reconciled to that inflitution against which he had declaimed during the best part of his life.

An express was immediately dispatched to Mrs Gauntlet with an account of her daughter's marriage: a town-house was hired, and an handsome equipage set up, in which the new-married pair appeared at all public places, to the assonishment of our adventurer's fair-weather friends, and the admiration of all the world; for, in point of figure, such another couple was not to be found in the whole united kingdoms. Envy despaired, and detraction was struck dumb, when our hero's new accession of fortune was consigned to the celebration of public same. Emilia attracted the notice of all observers, from the pert templar to the Sovereign himfelf, who was pleased to bestow encomiums upon the excellence of her beauty. Many persons of consequence, who had dropped the acquaintance of Peregrine in the beginning of his decline, now made open efforts to cultivate his friendship anew: but he discouraged all these advances with the most mortifying disdain; and one day, when the nobleman whom he had formerly obliged, came up to him in the drawing-room, with the salutation of "Your servant, Mr Pickle;" he eyed him with a look of ineffable contempt, saying, "I suppose your lordship is mistaken in your man," and turned his head another way, in presence of the whole court.

d

d

i-

y

e

e

S

d

١,

-

y

f

n

d

0

S

t

1

S

1

When he had made a circuit round all the places frequented by the beau-monde, to the utter confusion of those against whom his resentment was kindled, paid off. his debts, and fettled his money matters in town Hatchway was dismissed to the country, in order to prepare for the reception of his fair Emilia. In a few days after his departure the whole company (Cadwallader himself included) set out for his father's house, and, in their way, took up Mrs Gauntlet the mother, who was fincerely rejoiced to fee our hero in the capacity of her fon-in-law. From her habitation they proceeded homewards at an eafy pace, and, amidst the acclamations of the whole parish, entered their own house, where Emilia was received in the most tender manner by Mr Clover's wife, who had provided every thing for her ease and accommodation, and next day furrendered unto her the management of her own household affairs.

